Once a favorite here and admired by thousands of music lovers throughout the country, Madame Jeanne Jomelli now is an obscure music teacher in San Francisco, and her husband, Orrin Backus, lies critically ill in a Callifornia sanitarium, said Deputy Sheriff Christofferson upon his return yesterday from the south, where, among other things, he served a summons upon Backus for fallure to support his first wife and child in Portland.

The husband of the singer was too ill to be removed to this city. Almost penniliss, he told the deputy that be did not stop payment to Mrs. Myrtic A. Backus from choice but from necessity. He was indicted by the Multinomah county grand jury for non-support in June, 1918.

Madame Jomelli and Backus were both married when they met for the first time at a concert in San Francisco in 1915. Backus was then a civil engineer of some prominence. It was said to have been a case of mutual Infatuation. Shortly after the meeting Madame Jomelli filed suit for divorce in Columbia county, Oregon, Coming back to Fortland Backus began proceedings against his wife, charging her with deof infidelity and cruelty and divorce was granted her July 26, 1815, with $10 a month for the support of their son, William Henry Backus, aged 3. In 1817 Mrs. Backus secured an increase of alimony to $35 a month.

Popularity of Madame Jomelli waned, and she was accused of commercialism in her art. After her marriage to Backus, early in 1816, they went to California, her husband acting as her manager.
