Returning Teacher Declares Shantung
Sore Not Healing—Atrocities in Corea Told.

The situation at Shantung province, where the Japanese have taken over the German possessions in accordance with the terms of the peace treaty, is growing daily more tense, according to Kenneth McAfee of Parkville, Mo., who has just completed a four years' trip around the world, the last year of which was spent in China and Corea.

Mr. McAfee went to Egypt in 1915 as a teacher in an American mission college. In India he entered the army. Mr. McAfee worked with the British and was stationed in Bombay, the British base for the Mesopotamia and East African campaigns. He was in Port Said when Turkish aviators dropped several bombs in the city, and escaped on a life raft from a British mail boat which struck a mine six hours out of Bombay in the Indian ocean and sank in 20 minutes.

Going to Tsing-Tao, the principal city and port of Shantung province, he taught in another mission college there from the time of the signing of the armistice until the end of the school year, returning to the United States via Corea and Japan. He is visiting for a few days in this city with his brother, Ralph C. McAfee, executive secretary of the Portland church federation, before returning to the middle west to continue his studies.

Natives Reported Bitter.

When asked the sentiment of the native Shantung population in regard to the Japanese occupation, Mr. McAfee replied, "Bitter—extremely bitter." "The latest developments there," he said, "which shows the situation clearly, is the anti-Japanese boycott which has gone into effect all over China. The principal possession which the Japanese have taken over from the Germans is the railroad connecting the city of Tsing-Tao with the main line, a road from Peking to Shanghai. I rode all day on this railroad and passed one freight train. The car doors were open and I could see that nearly all of the freight cars were empty. The Chinese simply will not use the railroad. Japanese products of all kinds are being sold on the market because no one will buy them, and the storekeepers refuse to handle them. Japanese money is valueless in the stores.

"Early last spring a day was set aside in all the principal cities in China for the burning of Japanese goods. In Hang Chow, a city of 200,000 population near Shanghai, I saw the principal street piled high with straw hats, umbrellas, bicycles and all manner of Japanese goods. The populace held a public celebration while flames destroyed the pile.

Japanese Gendarmes Toll.
"One of the most galling things to the Chinese is the stationing of Japanese gendarmes all over Shantung, the birthplace of Confucius. Wherever you go in the province you find a representative of Japan looks over your passport to see who your grandparents were and why you are in Shantung.

"Ever since China entered the war there have been two governments in the country, one at Peking and the other at Canton, with constant civil strife going on between them. The Japanese are popularly believed to be financing both governments. A conference was held in Shanghai for the purpose of reconciling the differences of the two parties, but an outside influence, presumably Japanese, caused the conference to break up before it could accomplish any good.

"The boycott against Japanese goods and concessions was started by the Chinese student class in Shantung, which declared the school year over a month ahead of time and sent in small groups to every part of China as apostles of the boycott. The Japanese blame the boycott on the American missionaries, and the feeling between the Japanese and the Americans, who form the principal part of Shantung's foreign colony, is none too friendly.

"I believe I am safe in saying that every American in China realizes the treatment China is receiving at the hands of Japan, and as a result of this realization would like to see war declared between the United States and Japan.

Mr. McAfee was in Corea just after the riots in which thousands of Koreans were killed or brutally beaten by the Japanese military police.

"Corean boys," he said, "were stripped naked, bound to the floor with their bare backs exposed, and beaten with bamboo flails until the bones showed through the flesh. Hundreds of them died as the result of these beatings. I talked with two boys who had been in the hospital for two months since they were beaten, and they could still lie in only one position. I met a man with his arm in a sling who was a victim of the Japanese practice of firing into crowds wherever they began to gather. The brutality of the Japanese in Corea is unmatchable.

"The Japanese military governor in charge of Corea has been recalled, however, and there is some hope of improvement in the appointment of a civil governor. The principal Japanese papers now are advocating that a civil governor be placed in control of Corea.

MINE LOSS HEARINGS OPEN
THREE CLAIMS, TOTALING $66,125, PRESENTED IN PORTLAND.
 Ex-Senator Shafroth Hears Testimony to Clarify Written Evidence in Government's Hands.
 Three claims, aggregating $66,125.92, were considered yesterday by ex-United States Senator Shafroth, chairman of the federal mineral relief commission, who opened hearings in room 303, new postoffice building. Testimony dealt with expenses to promoters in preparing to supply the government with minerals necessary for the manufacture of wartime materials, and served to clarify the written claims as filed in Washington last month.

Much of yesterday's testimony was in connection with the claim of John Haak, in the sum of $60,000, for development of chrome mines in Josephine county. Mr. Haak appeared before the commission in support of his request for payment because of cancellation of contract, and a number of other witnesses testified as to the amount of development work done by Mr. Haak in exposing the ore, building roads and making general preparations to supply the steel industries needed minerals.

G. C. Irwin, 2906 Fifty-seventh avenue Southeast filed a claim for $511, and appeared for examination yesterday.

E. C. Torrow, 406 Henry building, asked for $614.92 for development of the Black Jack mine, near Prairie City, in January, 1918, and gave testimony in explanation of the nature of operations carried on. All witnesses testified that no chrome had yet been shipped when the armistice was signed, resulting in cancellation of contracts.

One case is scheduled for consideration today, and tomorrow Mr. Shafroth will take up the regular docket, which

Hood River Has Plenty Boxes.

HOOD RIVER, Or., Aug. 4.—(Special.)—While reports indicate a serious shortage of containers in other northwestern fruit districts, Hood River growers are supplied with apple boxes.

The Apple Growers' association and other local sales agencies contracted for their supply in advance. While the present market shows quotations of 17 1/2 cents each, the maximum charge to local growers this year will be 16 1/2 cents. Many obtained their containers for 15 1/2 cents.
