

POLICE JUDGE HELPS COUPLE MAKE GOOD

90-Day Sentence Given Two Young Drug Addicts.

SAD ROMANCE IN COURT

Love of Little Slip of Girl for Her Weak Mate Is Lever Which May Raise Both.

"Find romance in a police court? Nix on that stuff, buddy; it can't be done."

There is no romance, he says, for never yet have his trained ears caught even his echo during all the years he has witnessed the "sitcom" and "farce" of the city pass through the police court mill.

Let him who would seek out the litting poems of those who live and love look elsewhere. Police court is nothing more than the meeting place of derelicts. Romance has never yet dared lift her head in this lowly hall of justice. So says the sergeant, who has seen them all pass in review. And the sergeant thinks he knows.

But wait. She sat, a little huddled mass of femininity, in the prisoners' dock yesterday morning, trying vainly to shield her face from those about her. She cried softly. She looked so much like a startled, frightened fairy.

Pale Young Man Considers. "Cheer up, kid, we'll make it all right," were the whispered words of courage of a pale young man who sidled up to the bench beside her.

"Keep a stiff upper lip," he admonished. She dabbed her reddened eyes and looked up at him, smiling bravely. She looked over those in the courtroom with an air of defiance. At that moment she determined to "stick."

And then from her hanging lips came the story. A bride of four months she is, but her honeymoon has been a life of torment.

She is Essie McDonald, a small slip of a girl and extremely good looking. It was early this year that she met William McDonald, a shipyard worker, and soon after they married.

She knew when she married him that he was a drug addict, but her pity for the man was as deep as her love and she became his wife, determining to bring about his reformation. For several weeks their romance continued. The husband was fast gaining back his strength, both moral and mental.

Girl Slips With Him. But later he began to slip, and she, faithful to the last, slipped with him. His former drug-addict friends refused to leave him alone in his happiness. They sought right after night to make the honeymooners' bit of heaven a nest for drug addicts. And the girl, in her intense love of the man, decided that if he were to sink down to the gutter, she would go with him. She also took to the drugs.

"We want just one more chance," pleaded the husband as they stood side by side and begged for clemency. "We want to go out into the country where these people will not bother us again. We want to reform; to live out our lives as we planned. We want to make good."

And Judge Deich promised to help them. He sentenced them both to 90 days in jail with the understanding that the very day City Health Officer Parrish should say it was safe for them to be released, then they could leave together.

Both Promise to Make Good. "And we're going to make good," pledged the husband. "And between jobs and smiles, the girl-wife echoed.

"Yes, Billy, we'll bury the past and start out on our real honeymoon."

And yet, the police sergeant, tramping the beat, will still insist that in police court romance is never born.

"This is the first time I ever had a chance to beat the punchboard game." This was the admission of Judge Deich in police court yesterday as he smiled at gleefully at G. Anderson, charged with operating a punchboard.

"Your fine will be just $15 to serve me as a reminder that I can beat the punchboard," said the court as Anderson reached for his purse.

"If you ever bring a mess like this into court again I'll throw you all in jail on general principles," warned Judge Deich as R. R. Young, plus numerous relatives and neighbors, and Ella Wheeler, another relative, and neighbors fought out their neighborhood quarrel in court. The language each side is alleged to have used toward the other would make a hardy marine blush with envy. Young, the defendant, was discharged, but all concerned were warned to ease up on the rough talk and behave themselves.

EAST APPRECIATES OREGON

Columbia River Highway Wonder to People There, Says Traveler.

HOOD RIVER, Or., Aug. 5.—(Special).—"We have to go east to find that there is really a Columbia river highway," said M. Z. Donnell, pioneer druggist of The Dalles, who was here yesterday visiting his friend, Frank A. Cram.

"Honestly, I was surprised at the interest taken in the scenic road," he said. "As soon as people learned I was from Oregon, whether I was in Michigan or Louisiana, the Columbia river highway at once became the topic of conversation. I was captured bodily and taken to automobile club headquarters, where I was made to relate the story of the road's wonders to secretaries and managers."

"The people who have never been west cannot comprehend our scenery, and many believe the pictures we have sent out, showing the Mitchell's Point tunnel and other points of interest are faked."

Mr. Donnell has just returned from a tour of 2000 miles through the Mississippi valley and the gulf states. He was a guest on 2000 miles of motor rides through the south.
