

JAPANESE OF HAWAII LOVE U. S., THEY SAY

Delegation at Honolulu Visits

Tours Oahu.

HONOLULU, Aug. 22.—A delegation of prominent Japanese visited Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels here today and presented him with two bronze vases.

In making the presentation, the spokesman of the party said: "All of us admire the principles of government on which this great nation was founded. Our children, born here, are granted by your government the rights and privileges of American citizenship. Their sole ambition is to become good, loyal American citizens."

"We wish to express our deep gratitude for the prosperity, safekeeping and most fair and equal treatment we are enjoying here. We feel exceedingly fortunate at this great opportunity to enjoy the liberty, equality, justice and American democracy. We are proud our children are being educated in American schools. They are growing into men and women who are determined to lay down their lives if necessary for the country of their birth."

Secretary Thanks Japanese.

Secretary Daniels, in his reply, thanked the Japanese and said that he saw in the occasion another symbol of the friendship and amity existing between the two countries.

A tour of the island of Oahu was made today by Secretary Daniels and officers of the warships that accompanied him here. The secretary and his party were initiated into the mysteries of the "Luau," a native feast, which had been prepared for the visitors by local officials of the island government.

The menus and decorations at the scene of the feast, which was held at a point 40 miles distant from Honolulu, were distinctly Hawaiian. "Luau" have been given in Hawaii for a hundred years in honor of distinguished guests. Barbecued meats, cooked in native style in wrappings of leaves, poi and other Hawaiian delicacies had been prepared.

Native Huts Viewed.

From the modern skyscrapers of Honolulu, the visitors in a few hours were whisked to tiny villages where natives still live in grass huts, used in Hawaii for 1500 years; they passed the royal mausoleum, where lie the bones of many of Hawaii's native rulers; they drove through lines of thousands of acres of growing sugar cane and through enormous pineapple plantations.

Leaving Honolulu, the motor cars for six miles climbed up Nuuanu valley, which terminates abruptly at the Paia in a narrow gash with towering mountains on either side, with sheer drop of 1200 feet to the pineapple fields on the plains.

Air Too Hazy for Flights.

SALEM, Or., Aug. 22.—(Special.)—Aviators in the Oregon forest fire patrol service made no flights today because of the heavy condition of the atmosphere and the fact that three of the four machines assigned to the Salem base are out of commission. It is believed that operations will be resumed tomorrow.

Youngster Turns Face to Ground at First Sight of Machine.

ROSEBURG, Or., Aug. 22.—(Special.)—A squadron of three airplanes piloted by Lieutenants Goodrich, Kiel and Bratton, frightened animals at Yoncalla on a trip from Eugene to Roseburg. Flying in battle formation the three planes swooped down so low upon the rural village at the foot of the mountains that fowls scurried to cover to escape what must have appeared to them as large birds bent on destruction. Cattle and horses were stampeded.

A Yoncalla resident said one youngster who had never before seen an airplane fell flat upon his face and hugged the earth as the machines glided downward.

NEW FIRES FOUGHT IN OREGON FORESTS

Old Blazes Not Yet Put Under Control.

LOSS ALREADY IS $140,000

Dry, Windy Weather Leaves Situation Little Changed—Outbreak in Malheur Reserve Reported.

Dry, windy weather left the forest fire situation little changed in the state of Oregon, according to advices received at the federal forest headquarters yesterday. Several new fires were reported and a number of the old ones had not yet been put under control.

A new blaze was found in the Malheur forest in the Blue mountains yesterday. It had spread over 7000 acres. An experienced forester was sent out from the Portland headquarters to take charge of combating the flames.

Reports from the Whitman forest in the Blue mountains were that four fires had not yet been put under control. One of these on Big creek had covered more than a section of territory. In all 156 men were reported fighting the fires in that section.

A fire on 4000 acres near Cove in Union county was reported to have at last been put under control yesterday. Ten additional men were sent out yesterday to combat a fire which was still spreading on the Umpqua river near Diamond lake.

That all fires in the southwestern corner of the state had been put under control, with the exception of one on Whiskey creek, it was reported yesterday.

Figures compiled by federal forest officials yesterday showed that up to August 19 of this year a total of $140,000 had been spent by the government in fighting fires in the states of Oregon and Washington. It was estimated that unless there should be an abrupt change in the weather those figures would reach a total of $200,000 by the end of this month.

The expense of fighting fires in these two states this summer will be greater than for years, government officials estimated.

THOUSANDS OF ACRES BURNED

Montana Fires Rage Unchecked and Winds Add to Dangers.

MISSOULA, Mont., Aug. 22.—The forest fire situation in Western Montana and Northern and Central Idaho was unimproved today, blazes continuing their disastrous progress over an immense acreage of valuable timber and threatening many ranches. The situation in worst in the Clearwater, Selway and Nez Perce forests of Central Idaho, where the flames are burning unhindered and in many cases have burned bridges and ranger stations and severed all communication with the outside.

The Clearwater forest has a half dozen great fires, one being 50,000 acres in extent, another 27,000 acres and a third 20,000 acres. High winds today made the situation more critical than ever in this forest, which is virtually a mass of flames. The Rocky Ridge ranger's cabin burned yesterday and other cabins, buildings and bridges have been destroyed.

On the Selway forest, 156,335 acres have been burned over by a dozen big fires sweeping through the yellow pine timber, driving the forestry men before them. The fires named as being beyond control are spreading in all directions.

The Steamboat creek fire on the Coeur d'Alene forest has burned over eight sections of valuable timber and is spreading over a stand of timber valued at $2,000,000. The Jordan creek fire is burning dangerously.

SHEEP ARE FIRE VICTIMS

Flames in Idaho Forests Are Beyond
Control.

LEWISTON, Idaho, Aug. 22.—(Special.)—Five hundred head of sheep were destroyed by the forest fires in the Rocky Ridge section, according to reports that have been received here. The flock was owned by O. W. Jacks and L. V. Sifan, of Lewiston, who have gone to the district to make an effort to save the remainder of the band, which numbers about 500 head.

Advices received here from the Kootenai, Grangeville and Orofino headquarters of the forestry department show that the fire situation is now beyond all control in many zones.

In the Kootenai section many of the phone lines belonging to the forestry offices have been burned out.

All forestry supervisors now agree that rain is now a necessity to fight the fires.

HIGH WINDS FEARED IN LINN

Rain Needed to Wipe Out Forest Fire Danger.

ALBANY, Or., Aug. 22.—(Special.)—Rain is badly needed to put out the forest fires in this section of the state and to put an end to the dangerous condition prevailing in the forests. Practically all of the forest fires in Linn county are now under control, but several days will be required to burn themselves out. High winds are feared. The forests are so dry that new fires may spring up easily.

Forest guards and patrols have been busy for weeks and large forces of fire fighters are yet employed. Though the situation has improved, only rain will end the danger.
