GERMANY WILL RISE, SAY WAR WORSHIPERS

Sun Not Yet Set on Empire, Declares Monarchists.

KAISER STILL IS ADORED

Spirit of Men Who Are German to Core Not Yet Changed, Asserts Maximilian Harden.

(Copyright by the New York World, Pub-lished by Arrangement.) BY MAXIMILIAN HARDEN.

BERLIN, Oct. 5 .- Tacitus, the discoverer of Germania, tells of the jour-neys of the Goddess Erda (Hertha), who is honored as embodiment and generative source of all earth-forces. Out of the evergreen grove of her island in the northern ocean she often travels in her sacred car, drawn by two cows, to visit the homes of men far and near. Wherever she stops off, festival time begins; no feud is fought out; all fron tools are locked up and the face of the earth is smoothed out in peaceful quiet. This lasts un-til the goddess waxes weary of her intercourse with men and returns into

Before starting for home, she bathes in a lake, which thereby becomes holy and in which, under the eyes of a priest brought along, the car, the covers and the cows are washed, which then drink to everything as if in one swallow.

Swords Are Sharpened Again. And immediately after Erda's de-parture the old life awakens in new wildness. Swords are sharpened; all forces are hardened for the next was campaign, for the next booty expedi-

Thousands of years passed; and even today are the two Germanies which Tacitus divined, still recognizable to the eye piercing under the surface, and their numerical ratio is still approximately the same as it was in gray antiquity. And in the land which gave birth to the most effective of all reform-ers. Luther, the completer and over-shadower of Wyellff, the North-Ger-man spirit of the Erda myth remained alive, the whiles from all pulpits was preached the teaching of the Galilean. Brave in battle, without scruples of conscience in striving after conqueror's booty, industrious and "fresh" in business, with Mars and Mercury as gods, and war, gambling, beer for recreation—from these hints the very children the world over today would know that one is talking about Ger-

Many a friend of my home makes the qualification: "About Pan-Ger-mans." But he, too, must, if he knows New-Germany and wants to be just, admit that the number of people who acmit that the number of people was think and feel thus is much greater than the members, in the party sense, of the Pan-German league. These people do not long to enter into the light circle of the sermon on the mount and the consciousness of humanity. They feel themselves only as "German and want to remain like." Germans and want to remain like their ancestors, who believed in the all-father and sword-swinger Wotan and who believed that only by continued deeds of arms could they buy their way into Valhalla.

Every Stranger an Enemy. Every stranger is an enemy for them, every human being inseparably tied to his race. War has been pre-scribed for all eternity by nature's law: the warrior chief ranks with the delty, and befind thoroughness and increase of might, where for us others only does life, worth for us others only does life, worth dressing and undressing, for, begin, lies for them the black-white-red cover over the world-all.

These openly anti-Christian panGermans are preferable to the hypocrites and those veneered with Christianity. The big slave dealers, merchardles usures of Germany's porthchandise usurers of Germany's north west water front, the peasantry de-stroyer and lator exploiters of the big eastern estates, the grandfathers of our industries, vampire-like sucking human blood in mines, iron works and factories, these first became contemptible when they sank into affectation of piety and misused the cru-cifix as a lightning rod, to lead the lightning of the wrath of Heaven away from their house roofs or ship decks.

The defiantly pan-German doesn't indulge in such hypocrisy. For him the son of the Virgin Mary is the most dangerous of pacifists and spoilers of war spirit, and out of the Universal Church of Christ, of which th. Apostolic creed speaks and which never can be the church of one nation, one state, nor even hostile to Christians of other countries, no breath, no sound of a bell has ever entered into their hearts.

Grave for Empire Dug This host of men produced a large part of the strength through which the German empire, with such amaz-ing rapidity could raise itself to power, onderating power. That is cer-equally certain, however, that they dug the grave for this empire, because they remained stubbornly true to the old gods and goals in a completely changed age.

Out of this layer of society, and not as superficiality believes, first from Treitschke, Neitzsche or even the little General Bernhardi (who were lit-tle read beforethe war), came the men for whom strength is everything-might the generator of right, statesmanship empty phraseology, ideas nothing—and who, when it appears necessary for their purpose, do not hesitate to rase away from the face of the earth blooming provinces of a foreign land.

This layer wanted to maintain the eld order at every price, saw in Prussia the most efficient federal state in war and industry, but whose principal industry Mirabeau had already recognized to be war, the crown, almost the purpose of all creation, and after the victories of Frederick the Great and ditus"—new battle chant.

Bismarck not for a monent doubted that every war waged by Prussian University world which, old and young. Germany with full Germanic force is almost entirely nationalistic; the and without conscientious scruples the earth more wildly and farther than ever their dreams before; yellow, black, brown men, in addition to swarms of emancipated women, tilled Europe's fields, turned out Europe's shells and all now, man and woman, in their citizens' existence, demand the same equality which they had for four years and more in the trenches and in the mines.

Our only Germans, however, thought that at the beck of a helmet plume, at the order of some authorities or other, the primintive forces of manking would quickly duck into the old, tried order of things. But woman, slav, Tartar, the colored man, the kull, everything once most patient.
