

MOTHER AND SON TO FACE MURDER TRIAL

Formal Charges to Be Filed Today in Bryan Case.

VICTIM'S BODY ANALYZED

Several Thousand Dollars Found in Deposit Box Belonging to Mrs. Nemitz—Home Is Searched.

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 23.—(Special.)—William Fay Ealy, 23, and his mother, Mrs. Anna Ealy Nemitz, will be formally charged with the murder of Mrs. Elizabeth Bryan of Puyallup, whose body was found last Monday at Jones point, Mount Baker Park, by Captain of Detectives Charles Tennant in the morning, according to a statement made by him tonight.

The case has not been as satisfactory as I would have had it, Captain Tennant said, "but I believe we have obtained sufficient evidence on which to charge both with the murder of Mrs. Bryan."

Captain Tennant refused to discuss the nature of the evidence obtained by him, but it is believed that it is based principally on the movements of mother and son Sunday night, the night of the murder, and Monday, and the finding of the several thousand dollars in the safe deposit box belonging to them. Mrs. Bryan was robbed of $450 by the person who murdered her.

Nemitz Home Searched. Ealy continued his self-possession in the face of sharp interrogations by the detectives and Mrs. Nemitz' attitude is described as being somewhat defiant.

The Nemitz home was searched twice today on secret search warrants obtained by the detective captain and Deputy Prosecuting Attorney T. H. Patterson. Harry Nemitz, the husband, said that nothing was taken from the house following the search. Tennant and Patterson declined to discuss what they searched for or what they obtained.

Meanwhile, out at the University of Washington, chemist William Dehn, chemist, was at work in his laboratory making an analysis of the contents of the murdered woman's stomach to determine if she had been poisoned or drugged.

Slayer's Method Not Known. Since the body of Mrs. Bryan was found Monday morning, detectives have been uncertain, they admit, as to the exact method used by the slayer. They have maintained a theory that she may have been drugged with a motive of robbery, and that she was struck in the face and then strangled only when the drug failed to render her entirely unconscious.

The police are said to have established, through a peepbox at the Plaza hotel, where Mrs. Bryan registered Saturday afternoon, the fact that she got Ealy on the telephone Saturday evening, and that he later visited her at the hotel.

Detectives working in Puyallup have revealed some interesting but not especially pertinent facts regarding Mrs. Bryan and Ealy.

Mrs. Bryan had for years possessed an uncanny fear of violence at the hands of men.

This queer sidelight on the gruesome tragedy was disclosed today by the mother of George W. Bryan, husband of the murdered woman.

Women's Fear Recalled. "She always imagined and feared that men were following her," said Mrs. Bryan. Whenever she went out alone at night, she had been followed by a man.

Bryan's mother is the authority for the statement that her daughter-in-law's troubles began when she left Puyallup for Seattle last July, taking her infant daughter with her, for a five weeks' visit with friends.

At the end of the five weeks, Mrs. Bryan says, her daughter-in-law returned home dissatisfied and discontented with her lot—a vivacious young woman doomed to the quiet, insipid life of a small town, when she yearned for bright lights, theaters, gay friends and a good time.

One day the early part of October, Mrs. Bryan said, the younger woman went to Seattle again, when she came back she is said to have treated her husband with distant coolness, which grew more frigid day by day until on October 10 they agreed to separate.

Opera Costly in Berlin. PRICES FAR ABOVE THOSE OF HOHENZOLLERN DAYS.

Noske's Attempt to Moderate Excesses of Night Life Bring Out Amusing Incidents.

(Copyright by the New York World. Published by Arrangement.)

BERLIN, Oct. 23.—(Special Cable.)—Old-time lovers of music have an idea that opera will not flourish under a democracy unless, indeed, the operatic soul is well paid with money.

The very recent premier of Hans Pfitzner's "Palestrina" was proclaimed beforehand as the greatest musical event since Parsifal. The result was a tremendous demand for tickets. The state opera charged four times as much for admission as did the royal opera on like occasions.

One does not care to pay fourfold in order to be democratic and drop the word "royal" from a temple of music.

At the first performance opera-goers paid $25 for boxes, seats and $15 for an orchestra seat, something unprecedented even in the Hohenzollerns' most artistic days. The prices provoked a wave of protest, including the complaint that war profiteers occupied the best seats.

bers and regular patrons of the club. The Sporting club occupied an almost palatial house on the fashionable Hohenzollern strasse. When the military police descended on the club they arrested its president, Count Somati di Mombello, who, when put on trial before a military court, explained, rather falteringly, that he had been elevated to his high office only to attract aristocratic patronage. Further testimony disclosed that Police President Richter of Charlottenburg, a suburb of Berlin, and Police President von Salm of Lichtenberg, another suburb, and von Salm's two sons have been accustomed to pursue fickle fortune at the Sporting club. So even the civil police are not safe from Noske's determined raids.

The notorious "Foxtrot club," which occupied an admiral's mansion, has also fallen a victim to Noske's crusade. To capture it he employed a large force of military police and the highest strategy. Among the many "guests" arrested, those who protested loudest declared they were army officers, but had only visiting cards to prove their claim.

Under martial law the lid is being clamped so tightly on the city's perfectly harmless social clubs and associations have been warned that they must close promptly at 11 P. M. else the military police will invade them.

SPEEDING IS CONDEMNED

FAST DRIVE FROM ASTORIA TO PORTLAND PROTESTED.

Attorney-General Informs District Attorney Evans Highways Are for Public Use.

SALEM, Or., Oct. 23.—(Special.)—Conversion of the public roads of Oregon into speedways by careless and dangerous automobile drivers is condemned in a letter prepared today by Attorney-General Brown and addressed to District Attorney Walter Evans of Multnomah county, Glen R. Mettskar of Columbia county and Jasper J. Barrett of Clatsop county. The attorney-general's communication makes special mention of the recent record set by Forrest Bradley of Mount Scott, who drove an automobile from Astoria to Portland, a distance of 105 miles, in two hours and 21 minutes.

"Complaint has been made to this office of the excessive speeding on the highway between Astoria and Portland and Astoria has been made a speedway on which automobile sales are endeavoring to hang up a record for their cars," says the attorney-general's letter, "and in so doing flagrantly violate a criminal law of this state."

"The specific instance complained of is the alleged unlawful speeding upon the highway between Astoria and Portland by Forrest Bradley of Mount Scott at the wheel, accompanied by George V. Adams, salesman for the C. L. Boss Auto company.

"While no direct evidence has been furnished to this office in support of the alleged violation of the speed law, an account of the unlawful speeding of the parties appeared in the Oregonian under date of October 12. No doubt witnesses can be had to the violation of the law by the parties named.

"The state of Oregon is being bonded for millions of dollars to provide highways for the public and no man, whether he rides in an automobile or not, has any right to make travel over such highways dangerous."

Ex-Soldiers Made Citizens. SALEM, Or., Oct. 23.—(Special.)—Jacob Fuhrer, William James Bone and Tryve Peterson Helderstrom, all of whom served in the United States forces in the war with Germany, today were admitted as citizens in the Marion county circuit court. Ten other applications for citizenship also were considered by the court.

Centenary School Opens Today. LA GRANDE, Or., Oct. 23.—(Special.)—The Centenary school of instruction conducted by the Methodist church will convene here tomorrow, with pastors from eastern Oregon and Idaho in attendance. Several speakers of national reputation will conduct the instructions.

SKY BRIGHTENS FOR SEVERAL DEMOCRATS

McADOO CANDIDACY LEADS

A. Mitchell Palmer and Senator Pomerene Known to Be in Field for 1920 Nomination.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Oct. 23.—It being practically settled that President Wilson, by reason of the break in his health, will not be a candidate for a third term, there is a very perceptible awakening on the part of democratic candidates.

Subterranean efforts in behalf of the McAdoo candidacy are being carried on actively, while two other candidates are more openly in the field. One of these is A. Mitchell Palmer, attorney-general, and the other is Senator Alice Pomerene of Ohio. The Pomerene candidacy is being promoted by the organization of Pomerene clubs in many states, while Palmer is depending on a tour of 22 states, about to be started, to familiarize the democratic party of the nation with his qualifications.

The success of Palmer depends largely on the success of his fight on profiteers, which up to this time has not been an emphatic success. He has made all the noise of a wide-awake candidate, but has not achieved as much in bringing down prices as might be expected of a first-class attorney-general.

Pomerene's Issue Bolshevism. Pomerene, as told in these dispatches before, has chosen to make the issue of bolshevism, and among politicians he is regarded as more farseeing than his two rivals because of the general suspicion that radicalism is to be the big issue on which the next campaign will turn.

But the McAdoo candidacy is the most powerful of all because of the firm political groundwork which he was able to lay while secretary of the treasury and director-general of railroads. This candidacy is suffering, however, from the attacks that are being made upon it quietly within the party by certain democrats who are capitalizing his relationship to the present White House occupant and to use the administrative machinery to make himself his father-in-law's successor.

Barney Baruch, who qualified as financial adviser to the peace commission in Paris by selling short on the New York stock exchange in December, 1918, and cleaning up approximately $455,000 in one day, is the head and shoulders of the McAdoo boom and, although not an old war-horse in politics, he is admittedly about the best thing to be had in the shape of a campaign manager. To begin with, he has money and he has friends. With his money he has been making more friends, as evidenced by the very lavish entertaining he has been doing in Washington since the industrial conference has been in session.

Baruch Works Day and Night. He labors hard in the conference during the day to bring labor and capital together and at night devotes his time to bringing himself and some of the most potent men in the democratic party together. Such efforts are likely to land the nomination for the presidency for Mr. McAdoo, notwithstanding the fact that other candidates choose to make their contest on issues.

There is no sentiment about Baruch. He is a speculator in stocks. He cares nothing about what is back of the stock or what its par value may be a year hence. With him it is what it is worth for immediate returns. He does business on intuition and not on issues, as, for example, on the occasion when he cleaned up the $455,000 on the stock exchange. Intuition told him that Mr. Wilson was going to send a note to Germany the next day.

McAdoo's Record Known. His nomination will make the issue clear, whether he ever makes a political declaration between now and convention time or not. He is on record as favoring government ownership of railroads and all that is lacking is for him to say whether he indorses the Plumb plan. The republican party is just as strongly committed against government ownership, so the voter can easily take his choice and know what he is getting.

Attorney-General Palmer is a bet. Read The Oregonian classified ads.
