Ralph Edmunds, Big Game Hunter, Tells Thrilling Story of Perilous Trip to Coast.

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 27 .- (Spe cial.)-Chilling winds from Arctic wastes sweeping southward over northern Alaska have transformed balmy autumn in the great Yukon basin into the dead of winter, choking the streams that flow into the Yuken with gigantic ice floes and trapping hundreds of miners, prospectors, fur hunters and big-game sportsmen, all hurrying for the "outside" to escape an early Arctic win-ter, the earliest in history. So says Ralph Edmunds, crack rifle shot, big-game hunter and magazine writer, formerly of Idaho Falls, Idaho, Edmunds reached Scattle Sunday evening on the steamship Alaska en route to his Los Angeles home, after spending a year in the hunting fields of the north. Mr. Edmunds returned with excellent trophies of moose, carlbou, grizzly bears and mountain sheep, which will be added to his collection in the Los Angeles museum of natural history.
