More Truth Than Poetry. By James J. Montague.

ART. f could not write a trashy play With sodden theme and dreary

Like those you see along Broadway Beneath the big electric signs. No trifling drama could I pen For which the populace would fall, And pay their cash to see-but then. I could not write a play at all. But I will state that if I could, I would.

I could not write the sort of tale Put forth by Mr. Harold Wright Which critics bitterly assail But people buy with wild delight. The hack's dull trade I could not play To gain the popular support. In point of fact, I doubt that I Could write a book of any sort But would I thus attain success? Yes, Yes!

I know crude writing Is not art And art alone is worth the while, It's most ignoble to depart From the accepted rules of style,
But one can't live by art alone
And if the product of my pen
Although it made the critics groan
Would earn a thousand now and then  Would I write stuff that waen't good? I would!

They Laugh at the Flight of Years-These Staunch and Eminently

Serviceable "Old" Men How old are you? Have the years touched your thatch with silver or thinned it away as a memory? A fig for mere years, anyhow-you are as old as you feel, and there are services yet waiting your effort and your thought. In the Sunday issue are cited any number of prominent men, powers in the world of unabated vigor, whose years alone would classify them as fit for slippers and a fireside. John Wanamaker, Samuel Gompers, Dr. Charles W. Eliot, Chauncey M. Depew, John Burroughs, and a score of others, all testify that the path toward the sunset is a busy and useful one, if men but choose

HORRORS OF CHILD BEGGARY IN MEXICO-Here is a yarn to shudder at, with the prayer that light may sometime, and soon, dawn after the long darkness that has rested upon Mexico. It deals with the slavery of children, abducted for the profession of beggary, and mutilated horribly to excite the pity of alms-givers. It is authentic in every detail and the stories presented are from the reports of American Humane association, which delegated trained investigators to probe this barbarism of the southern republic, land of contradictions and terror.

PORTLAND'S MANLESS HOTELS - When the modern young woman, by circumstance or choice, cleaves the ties of family and friends in other cities, and comes to Portland to carve out a career in the business world-there is no lack of homes for her. In The Sunday Oregonian, with illustrations of cosy quarters where women make their homes while serving the world of affairs, is a special article by DeWitt Harry. It discusses the "manless hotels" of Portland, cleanly, comfortable, and responding to a definite need of the modern era.

THE LOVE MATCH THAT HAS SCANDALIZED ROUMANIA-Court etiquette and the rule of royalty that kingly blood must never stoop to the love of one of lesser birth, were swept aside by Crown Prince Carol, of Roumania, when he fled with Zizi Lambrino, otherwise the "Little Parisienne" of Bucharest, and set his royal mama and the rest of the royal household on their royal noses-figuratively speaking. A lively romance from real life, in the Sunday issue, with pictures of the young lovers.

THE VICTORY AT SEA-Heard about the "depth charge," haven't you? It was an iron-bound catastrophe that plunged into old ocean and sought out the lurking submarine, rending the seaterror to scrap-iron and sending to the surface that well-known "smear of oil" that featured in the naval dispatches during the world war. Just what the depth charge accomplished in opening the sea lanes and bringing Germany to her knees, is told by Admiral William Sowden Sims, in the Sunday issue, through the latest installment of his stirring serial of American naval activities against the Hun.
