

SLEEPING SICKNESS TAKES 2 LIVES HERE

Third Case in Portland Is Under Surveillance.

INVESTIGATION IS BEGUN

Victims in Both Instances Are in Same Neighborhood—Physicians to Discuss Situation.

Two deaths resulting from "sleeping sickness" technically known as lethargic encephalitis, have occurred in Portland during the last week and another case now is under surveillance. The prevalence of the disease until last night was unknown by the city health authorities because the cases were said not to have been reported to the city health bureau.

Victims in Same Neighborhood.

The fact that both victims live in the same neighborhood, the homes being but four blocks apart, will result in an investigation by the health authorities to ascertain if by any possible chance, the disease had been transmitted, and if so, how.

The name and address of the third party was not available to the health office last night, it being said that City Health Officer Parrish had been informed of the disease case and that arrangements had been made for the city health officer to accompany the physician in charge of the case sometime today.

Disease Is Communicable.

Although "sleeping sickness" is generally understood to be in the communicable disease list and hence should be reported to the health bureau, there is no specific ordinance covering the point. This is possibly the reason that reports have not been made, according to City Health Officer Parrish. Immediate steps will be taken by the city health authorities to obtain the passage of an ordinance to require reports even on suspicious cases.

The regular meeting of the City and County Medical Society tonight in the Portland hotel is expected to take up discussion of the situation. Drs. Leon Wolf and O. A. Thornton, who treated the Sturdevant and Lacomanno cases, as well as the medical men who were called in for observation, will probably take part in this discussion. A general alarm has been sounded that "sleeping sickness" is fatal in all instances, but according to competent medical men who have examined the victims, it is said that about 20 per cent of the victims of the disease succumb, while the remainder recover without any apparent ill effects.

ICE-BOXES ARE RAIDED GAME BIRDS ARE FOUND AND HOTEL MEN FINED.

Convictions Result Where Fowl Are Not Tagged—Arlington Club Chief Taken in Net.

From now on game birds held in the ice-boxes of saloons, Portland's leading hostesses and clubs are apt to be properly tagged in compliance with the fish and game laws. As a result of six arrests by game wardens and several fines distributed by District Judge H. C. Venable yesterday, a suspicion that ducks and pheasants were being sold in more or less elite circles led to raids on the refrigerators where numerous game birds were discovered, none tagged by game wardens. While E. H. Clark and J. J. Craig, deputy game wardens, believed that in some cases the birds actually were shot by patrons, there was no evidence to show that they had not come from the commercial "sportsmen" known to be busy in the game-bird regions.

Seventeen wild ducks were discovered in the ice-box of the Multnomah hotel. L. E. Tewksbury, maître-d'hôtel, was arrested and fined $25. He admitted his guilt but pleaded ignorance of the law. He insisted that the birds had been brought in by a guest.

Deputy Game Warden Clark said there had been a presentation of the birds that wild ducks had been served at the Multnomah. The case of E. H. Gowans, chef of the Arlington club, where 30 ducks were found on ice, was continued until today.

Henry Thiele, Benson hotel chef, was among those against whom complaints were sworn, but did not come up for hearing yesterday. There were 23 game birds discovered in the refrigerator at this hotel. Manager Myers of the Oregon hotel
