BEST ON DEFENSIVE

Advantage Not Great, but Big Enough to Admit.

PULLMAN CROUCH FACTOR

Hard Charging, Low Playing Staters May Make Trouble for Lemon and Yellow.

BY HARRY M. GRAYSON. Who'll win the big game? No. 2-The defense.

Washington State college has the best defensive team. It's advantage it not great, but after dipping deep into the dope bucket one is forced to give Gus Welch's crew the edge. The college line, from end to end, towers over that of the University of Ore-gon. Pullman would have a greater margin but for the ability of "Shy"

Huntington's great set of backs in backing up the first line of defense and the kicking ability of Bill Steers. The low charging crouch of Wash-ington State, coupled with the way the Cougar linemen use their hands, has an advantage over the higher standing defensive lemon-yellow line. Gus Welch has the experience gained under Glenn Warner and the ad-vantage of seasons of coaching over "Shy" Huntington, the youngest mertor in the conference, and one of the most youthful now handling big league football teams.

Out of that experience the foxy Redman has had a greater opportun-ity of figuring football from all angles and to thoroughly work out and learn just how each individual posi-tion should be played. Of course, Huntington played four years under Hugo Berdek, who is all but as good a coach as the great Glenn Warner. Control of Men Factor.

There's heaps more than experience that goes with the making of a suc-cessful manipulator of football play-ers. Control over the men while coaching, the spirit of the institution, and the keeping down of factions among the knights of the gridinon are three of the not most unimportant things. Everyone knows that "Shy" Huntington has every Orego-nian fighting tooth and nail for him. From all accounts, Welch enjoys the From all accounts, Welch enjoys the same pleasure, so there is no advantage there. Carl Dietz is Welch's assistant and the famous Lonestar Dietz has tipped off the 1919 Pullmantenm to a few little faults. Bart Spellman teaches the Eugene line how to cavort on the sawdust field. The only advantage Washington state has in coaching is in Welch's greater experience.

The rival teams are on a par at The rival teams are on a par at breaking up aerial attacks. By this is meant that their systems of defense have performed equally as well to date. The real test will come tomorrow. Both aggregations use what may be termed a combination of the short and long pass. In view of this fact it might be said that each coach will know just about how to place his defense in order to smear the opposing team's forward passes. posing team's forward passes.

Center Is Weak Spot. Although reports from Eugene as well as from Pullman have been more or less censored the past few days, you can bet a flock of turkeys against a goose that down the Willamette valley Huntington and Spellman are orking the center of the lemon-yel-

They know that the center of their line leaked like a sieve against Wash-ington a week ago and realize that Gus Welch will pour volley after volley of football flesh through there, and unless Brick Leslie, Carl Mautz and Al Harding hold, fight, claw and dig more than ever before the ene my's steam roller will tear off first down after first down.
Gus Welch is expected to direct his attack, for the most part, through the center of the line, just inside and outside of tackle and to employ short, snappy end runs.

Tackle Plays Successful.

Huntington's team looked best against Washington on plays just out-side of tackle and inside of end, al-though his forwards boxed up the Washington wings-Ted Faulk and Theisen-repeatedly. The two teams' system of making holes through the line are different insomuch as the college's line employs a lower crouch. The defensive systems of both Huntington and Welch, in a general way the same, seldom call for the men to be in the same position twice during a game. Both use the old army game with the fullback backing up the line, the halves playng some four to six yards back of the tackles and the quarterback run ning wild some ten yards back of the line of scrimmage. Both Huntington and Welch have resorted to the floatcenter system. Particular offenthis system can be used to ad-

Bill Steers should average 45 yards work hard to produce an average of 40. Steers' kicking offsets some of the college's defensive margin gained in having the better line. The condition of the teams will be as nearly perfect as possible. Bill Hayward and J. Fred Bohler are honest-to-goodness train

All in all, Washington State college has the best of it when speaking or defense. However, a team's offen is oftentimes its best defense, a conceded, in a pinch, the best of it on the attack.

Not to be outdone, Oregon sports three sets of brothers. There's "Shy" and Holly Huntington, the former making good as coach and the latter spending his last year at fullback. "Spike" Leslie, glant tackle who may be out of Saturday's game on account of injuries, is the brother of Brick Leslie, the center, Vince Jacobberger plays half while Francis Jacobberger is one of the lemon-yellow reserves who plays either quarter or half.

That either team may win tomor-ow is shown by Weich's unusual eticence in predicting the outcome.
