SUSPECT HELD IN JAIL

Centralia Joyful Over Capture of Man Wanted for Part in Armistice Day Murders.

(Continued From First Page.) Shots were exchanged, the fugitive dodging his way down a line of telephone posts. The firing brought Charles Hill, a nearby resident into the street with a weapon ready. Both Hill and Jaaska exchanged a number of shots with Bland, but the latter escaped.

Though neither Hill nor Jaaska knew Bland they found on the floor of the store a dental receipt, evidently dropped from his pocket when he drew his revolver. The receipt was made out to Bert Bland from the office of a Centralia dentist.

Hunted Man Gets Meal. At 4:30 this afternoon Bland made his way to the home of Curley Mills, known to him as a farmer fellow woodman in various logging camps. The mills house is on the outskirts of Rochester, a few miles north of Helmsing Junction. Bland entered the residence and demanded food. A meal was served him, which he ate with ravenous haste. At its conclusion the fugitive left the house and continued his flight.

Independence, near the shack where Bland was taken, is in the southwestern corner of Thurston county, exactly on the western boundary of the county and about two miles due west of Helmsing Junction. The chase had worn the fleeing murder suspect and known L. W. W. plotters to such an extent that he could no longer maintain his position. He was recognized at Rochester and Helmsing Junction, the fugitive seemed to have abandoned all hope of escape and determined to await the searchers who would eventually drag him out.

Capture Highly Important. With the capture of Bland the prosecution expects a flood of light to be turned upon two or three complexities of the armistice day murders. According to the testimony of eyewitnesses who were in the parade, Bland was one of the radicals who was stationed in the Astor hotel, opposite the I. W. W. headquarters. When the enraged paraders broke ranks in the rush to wreak vengeance upon the slayers of their comrades witnesses say that they saw him flee.

But the confession of Laurence Roberts, one of the I. W. W. now in custody on the charge of murder, who gave himself up to the law two days after the attack, has caused the authorities to believe that Bland was one of the I. W. W. who were stationed on Seminary hill and who fired from that vantage point into the stream of paraders at Independence. Roberts' confession gave the description of a radical fireman unknown to him but answering to the description, who worked a high-powered rifle at his elbow on the crest of the hill.

Crime May Be Cleared. The question of Bland's share in the quadruple crime will now be made clear, it is felt certain. If he was stationed in the Astor hotel, as other witnesses assert, his were the shots, it is alleged, which struck down Warren Grimm, at the head of his platoon. After the confession of Roberts the authorities believe that Bland and two other fugitives, one of them named Ole Hanson, in the heavily timbered mountain country northeast of here, at the headwaters of the Hananof river, for it was there that Roberts said the three hillside murderers had taken refuge, supposedly in one of the several cabins scattered throughout the district.

According to prosecuting Attorney Allen, the only statement that Bland has made refutes the opinion that the fugitive has been hiding in that locality. Bland said that they had been hiding in the timber near Independence, southwestern Thurston county, and that his companion was Ole Hanson. He remained with Hanson until Sunday night, the prisoner said, when his companion left him and struck forth in the direction of Centralia.

Fosses in the mountainous region, where I. W. W. fugitives are still believed to be in hiding, have been to a large extent withdrawn, according to Lieutenant Frank Van Gilder, commander of military police and a volunteer posse.

Search Is Continued. But the search for the two or three radicals yet at large and who have been named by the state as participants in the killing of four service men, has not been abandoned. Rather it will be concentrated with a smaller number of men in the field in order that accidental shooting of posse members, such as the fate that overtook John Haney, volunteer, from the Tenino district, may not happen again.

"We have no reason to alter our belief that at least two or three suspects are yet in hiding in the wild country northeast of here, near the headwaters of the Skookumchuck and Hananof rivers," said Lieutenant Van Gilder tonight.

"But we are changing our plan of campaign. The Centralia posse out there now numbers but 15 men, with the exception of the guards posted at the trails.

"What would you think," smiled Lieutenant Van Gilder, "if we were to say that one man, the finest shot and keenest woodsman in the country, is going in there alone with orders to bring them out? Well, he is. But his name is not given out just now for obvious reasons."
