

JUDGES BEGIN WORK AT LIVESTOCK SHOW

Wet Weather Fails to Lower Day's Attendance.

BLUE RIBBONS AWARDED

Shorthorns, Herefords, Holsteins and Guerneys Scored—Dairy Lectures Prove Interesting.

Made-in-Oregon rain may have caused the drooping of a few fall bonnets and a few silk parasols, but it could neither dampen the ardor of the scores of stock-breeders, nor the enthusiasm of the several thousand enthusiasts who thronged within the big pavilion yesterday to inspect the blooded aristocracy of the northwest livestock world while the judges were hard at their labor of grading these prized and valued animals.

In spite of rain and stormy drizzle, the streets and taxis and other conveyances unloaded their crowds of visitors in front of the doors throughout the day, and although official tabulations of the attendance were not forthcoming last night, it was said with certainty that the attendance of the opening day of the Pacific International Livestock exposition was more than usual.

Shorthorns Are Judged.
The hour of 8 o'clock had scarcely tolled before, Shorthorn breeders began leading into the judging ring splendid types of Shorthorns for the official inspection of Frank Scottfield of Hillsboro, Tex. Mr. Scottfield, who is vice-president of the Shorthorn Breeders' association, is the official judge of breeding and fat shorthorns. In another part of the cattle arena, Finley McMartin, judge of milking shorthorns; H. A. Allen, judge of breeding and fat Herefords; W. S. Moecrip, judge of Holsteins, and Robert Scoville, judge of Guerneys, began their painstaking work of inspecting these sleek animals as they were led into the ring.

In the sheep sheds Thomas Baylen labored throughout the day selecting the woolly animals which were ticketed for ribbons of blue and red and white. C. M. McAllister had a herculean task in selecting the winners in the swine department, as the entries were crowded and the porkers were all of such a high grade that more than once he had to give some of the swine a second inspection before making final decision.

Exhibitors Accept Decisions.
But through it all the breeders and exhibitors showed that splendid spirit of sportsmanship which made the work of the judges a genuine pleasure where a bitter word of criticism here or there might have made their lot a hard one.

"I'm not worrying over the blue ribbons," was the philosophical comment of a Williams exhibitor when his porkers failed to receive the colored ribbons. "I've had as many offers to sell my stock as some of those who are getting all the prizes, and after all, swine breeding is a business proposition. If the other fellows get all the prizes, I say more power to them. We can't all be winners, you know."

"This is the spirit which officials of the Pacific International Livestock exposition may make for the success of the 1919 show. They likewise unite in declaring that spirit such as this will be the foundation for even a greater show in 1920."

All during the afternoon, the stadium was kept filled with the blooded animals for the busy inspection of the judges, and as soon as one class had been completed and classified another class was waiting at the gates ready to enter for the supreme test of the exposition.

Band Furnishes Music.
Each breeder and blooded animal had its quota of partisans, and as evidenced time after time when mighty cheers arose as the judges selected some prize animal for the prized blue ribbon.

A hand under the leadership of Percy A. Campbell, furnished music throughout the afternoon, and this added to the general gaiety of the event.

At the western dairy products show the attention of those interested in this industry was held at high tides through the medium of instructive lectures by Professor M. Mortenson of Iowa state college and Professor O. E. Reed of Purdue university, both of whom are considered national authorities on dairying husbandry.

The lectures of these men were augmented by interesting motion pictures depicting various phases of the dairying industry and by classes in dairying and kindred subjects, which they conducted during the afternoon. Those who attend these dairying classes will be given an opportunity of learning just what they have assimilated when judging contests of dairying products will be held later in the week for those enrolled.

Record Value to Be Showed.
In the dairy products department today C. C. Dickson of the Auburn farm, near Shedd, Or., will discuss the value of keeping a complete record in developing a dairy herd. In addition to lectures by Professors Mortenson and Reed, on dairying subjects also will be given by E. Westover, extension dairyman from Oregon agricultural college; Edward Carey, Carlton, Or.; J. D. Mickle, state dairy and food commissioner, and W. D. Rieth of Astoria. The programme will start at 10 o'clock this morning with the motion pictures and continue all afternoon and this evening when the Guerneys breeders will hold their annual banquet at the Benson hotel.

All the livestock judges will continue with the work of judging animals throughout the day and the horse show tonight will open with a grand parade of all livestock on exhibit at the exposition.

Although private sales have been conducted by the owners and breeders since the opening day, the official auction sales of the various breeding associations will start at 10 o'clock this morning. Keen rivalry is expected during the auction sales, as many livestock men have come to the show prepared to take carloads of registered stock back with them.

Fat Stock Sales Scheduled.
The opening sales today will be held at 10 A. M. when the buyers will place the fat stock on the block at the stockyards pavilion. The shorthorn sale, which perhaps is attracting more attention than any other, will start tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in the breeders pavilion. Workmen were completing the construction of these sales pavilions yesterday and they will be in readiness for the opening sales this morning.

Today has been officially designated by the management as Portland and Vancouver day, and it is expected the attendance will reach the highest of the entire week, as all Portland will be expected to visit the big pavilion some time during the day.

STOCK SHOW SIDELIGHTS

C. CHAPMAN, who bosses the "Bunny Lanesome" farm near Hopewell, Marion county, as his regular vocation, and edits and publishes the Oregon Voter in Portland as a sort of avocation, is staking the blooded swine with a view of making a number of purchases during the week for his farm. Mrs. Chapman will motor in from the farm tomorrow and will augment C. C.'s swine purchases with a few selections of high grade sheep.

Mr. Mortenson, professor of dairying at Iowa State college, formerly lived in Portland and he still retains a deep fondness for his former home. Mr. Mortenson is one of the dairying lecturers at the Western Dairy Products show, held in conjunction with the exposition. When he left Portland 11 years ago his daughter was but 11 years old. She has since grown to young womanhood but her childhood friends are still remembered as she corresponds with her former Portland playmates as though she had been absent but a few months. One of her greatest disappointments was in being unable to accompany "daddy" on his present trip to Portland.

If O. M. Plummer, general manager of the exposition, would tie a clarion-bell about his neck, he would correspond with her former Portland playmates as though she had been absent but a few months. One of her greatest disappointments was in being unable to accompany "daddy" on his present trip to Portland.

Louis R. Simpson, prominent Oregonian, was wearing one of those perpetual smiles as he strolled about the pavilion yesterday. The answer was easily obtained. His sister, Mrs. Roy M. Pike of San Francisco, took a couple of first prizes at the exposition, naturally, is interested as much in this feature of the exposition as in the exhibit of other classes of stock.

"This is without a doubt the finest Holstein show Oregon has ever staged and the 1920 show of the Pacific International Livestock exposition ranks with the finest and largest in the country," naturally, is interested as much in this feature of the exposition as in the exhibit of other classes of stock.

The breeders of Guerneys cattle will stage a banquet at 8 o'clock tonight at the Benson hotel, and needless to say, Clatsop county will be well represented about the banquet board. The lower Columbia district is especially adapted to the raising of Guerneys and the breeders of that section are specializing in this class of dairy cattle.

"I'm here to extol the virtues of the foster mother of the world—the Holstein cow," was the proud announcement of Rolfe W. Watson of Tillamook county, representing the Tillamook County Holstein Breeders' association and the Holstein-Friesian association of America.

As secretary-treasurer of the Tillamook county association Mr. Watson was responsible for bringing that county's choicest Holsteins to the Pacific International exposition for exhibit purposes, and he had every reason to rejoice yesterday when he learned that six out of seven of the Tillamook Holstein entries had been given ribbons in the judging yesterday morning. He is an ardent booster for the local livestock show, and when O. M. Plummer made his trip to Tillamook county for funds for the new pavilion, the dairy cattle breeders and owners oversubscribed their allotted quota by more than 50 per cent.

"That indicates how Tillamook county feels about this big exposition, and you can take my word for it that our interest will never wane so long as I am on top of the grass that's green the whole year round," he declared.

If a man really believes that his product is entitled to real recognition, a few temporary reverses will not cause him to lose heart. For instance, F. W. Christensen, cheese inspector for Tillamook county, took eight cheese entries to the Oregon state fair and went away from the state exposition without a ribbon—even a white one. Undaunted, he brought the same six entries to the Western Dairy Products show and secured the first six prizes and a tie for seventh out of his eight entries.

"To show the difference in judging, I sent the head of cheese which secured the lowest score at the state fair to the national show at Chicago a month later and secured ninth place out of 120 entries," he said.

"Then we brought them all here to the Pacific International show and carried off every ribbon they were giving for high-grade cheese."

Although there are a few federal and state laws prohibiting raffles, when the Red Cross is interested Uncle Samuel is willing to wink his left eye and close the right. All of which means that these slight prize-winning heads of cheese from Tillamook will be raffled off Saturday evening and the proceeds will be given to the Red Cross. O. M. Plummer, general manager of the exposition, will handle the raffle.

Paid admissions Monday to both the stock show and horse show numbered 4109, according to the official tabulation completed yesterday morning. In addition to the paid admissions, there were a great number of membership passes, exhibitors' passes and others which swelled the opening day attendance to 7200. The attendance yesterday was far greater, but the official tabulation will not be known until officials complete their check this morning. Unofficial estimates place the total number of persons in the pavilion yesterday greater in excess of 10,000.

The famous APEX Electric Washing Machine

The Famous APEX Electric Washing Machine

Superior Because—

The oscillating rock-a-bye motion washes faster than other machines. The method is the most harmless and gentle known, because there are no moving parts in the tub to wear the clothes.

The copper, never-rust tub is self-cleaning. Nothing to get sour or mouldy. No need to scour with gasoline or lift out heavy parts. Always sanitary.

The APEX has a swinging, reversible wringer. The APEX all-metal construction will last a lifetime. Ask the people who have used it in Portland for years.

We guarantee the mechanism.

Any washing machine will wash clothes, but the APEX washes faster, more gently, and is constructed of more lasting material. But it costs no more than ordinary machines.

We want you to test the APEX in your home. Use it one week absolutely free—no obligation to buy. Withhold your decision until you have tried it. This is an opportunity to analyze the APEX under the most exacting conditions—in your home—with your own laundry. This offer good for 10 days only—Nov. 29 expiration date. Sold on Easy Payment Plan.

A PARDONABLE DECEPTION

The taking of the old-time laxative was an experience of extreme unpleasantness to most of us. The disguising of the unpleasant taste has been accomplished in PULETT'S, the candy laxative. The natural tastes of the ingredients are completely camouflaged by a candy-like flavor. The pleasing deception does not interfere with the action of the tablets—they are completely efficient as a laxative. PULETT'S contain no drastic purgatives and therefore restore the normal tone of the bowels and help to re-establish the normal functions. There are 25 of these candy-like tablets in the 25c boxes. PULETT'S are featured in all stores of The Owl Drug Co.—Adv.
