DEMOCRATS RESENT WHITE HOUSE ACTION

Stand on Peace Treaty Regarded as Sacrifice.

VOTE SHOWS STRONG TIDE

Document Negotiated at Versailles Considered Incapable of Being Revitalized.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Nov. 20.—is the peace treaty dead? If so, will it stay dead? These are the questions asked today. To them the answer most heard is that the document as negotiated at Versailles is not capable of being re-

Versailles is not capable of being revitalized.

Technically, the treaty is not dead but sleeping, but any analysis of the votes taken in the senate the last few weeks will satisfy thoughtful persons that the tide has been running against it. The question now is whether Mr. Wilson could again hold his democratic forces in line as was done to the last minute yesterday.

Under their breaths many of those democrats who went down fighting last night for an unamended treaty as demanded by Mr. Wilson are heaping maledictions upon the White House. To use the exact language of two of these senators, they were "sacrificed." It was, indeed, hard for several democratic senators to stand out against the treaty on the last vote on the Lodge resolution.

Senator Hitchcock Blamed.

Senator Hitchcock Blamed. Senator Hitchcock blamed.

Senator Hitchcock, democrat leader, came in today for a share of the blame. He was accused of failure to stand up and let the president know the real situation. A better politician, it was said, was needed; also a better parliamentarian.

A wiser notifician, it was asserted, ter parliamentarism.

A wiser politician, it was asserted, would have told Mr. Wilson that the results of some of the recent elections, particularly the special election in Oklahoma, were a warning that the people were arrayed against the Wilsonian programme. Senator Owen of Oklahoma, who before never had separated from the administration since Mr. Wilson became president on March 4, 1913, could hear the rumble of the recent Oklahoma protest last night and, when the final test came, left his party to join his colleague. Senator Gore, in support of the Lodge resolution.

All day long other democrats, with anguish in their voices that denoted imminent tears, protested to the mild reservationists on the republican side that they could not help to reject the treaty. But something kept them ateadfast and they went contrary to their own inclinations.

Former Situation Develops.

Today the situation is just as it was after the election last fail. Democrats who wanted Mr. Wilson to issue a plea to the voters to elect a democratic congress, blamed him for what happened as they glanced at the devastated state of their party throughout the country the next day. Senator Hitchcock's parliamentary tactics are criticized. He was outgeneraled at every turn by Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, majority leader, assisted by Senator Lenroot. The entire Hitchcock plan of parliamentary strategy was shown several times to be pitiably in error when he led his followers into blind alleys and unforseen pitfalls from which they were only extricated by the generosity of the foe.

When congress convenes one week from next Monday the two houses will have before them a concurrent resolution declaring the war at an end. This will arouse protesta, because a concurrent resolution takes the matter out of the hands of the president. But a joint resolution would not after the advantage of Mr. Wilson's foes, because a joint resolution would not after the advantage of Mr. Wilson's foes, because a joint resolution would put it straight up to the president whether he wishes to veto the action of congress in declaring peace. It would be a desperate responsibility, but one which may confront the White House, it is said, if there is overmuch complaint. Former Situation Develops.

front the White House, it is said if there is overmuch complain against the concurrent plan.

In bringing the treaty again before the senate, there is no likelihood, that any compromise would be offered on reservations milder than those carried in the Lodge resolution. Sentiment against several provisions in the treaty grew so rapidly among the mild reservationists in the last days of debate that it looked like some of them might join the irreconciliables.

For example, the labor provision, if the treaty should again come before Labor Provision in Danger.

For example, the labor provision, if the treaty should again come before the senate, might be completely eliminated. The reason is that industrial conditions in this country have turned many senators against international labor conferences. The appearance of some labor delegates recently in this city from abroad has strengthened the prejudice, because it is declared that among those who have gathered here are a few have gathered here are a few socialists who are nothing more nor less than sugar-coated anarchists, os-tensibly here to discuss the improve-ment of labor conditions throughout ment of labor conditions throughout the world, but in reality bent on the one purpose of sowing discontent and revolution among American work-ingmen. Other articles in the treaty in the same way have been attract-ing opposition as their true meaning was revealed.
