VIOLINIST SUFFERS PHYSICAL COLLAPSE Maud Powell Stricken During St. Louis Concert.

WESTERN FRIENDS BELIEVE BREAKDOWN IS DUE TO OVERWORK; PORTLAND APPEARANCES MANY.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 28.—Maud Powell, violinist, collapsed on the stage at the Odeon last night just as she had finished playing a spiritual melody, and was taken to a hospital, where she is under the care of physicians.

PORTLAND FRIENDS OF VIOLINIST RECALL WARTIME SERVICES. Local friends of Maud Powell, famous American violinist, who has made many appearances in this city, are inclined to believe that her collapse during a recent engagement at St. Louis was brought about by her indefatigable efforts during the war period, when she appeared at nearly every cantonment and encampment in the country, giving concerts to the service men.

MADAME POWELL is reported to be seriously ill at St. Louis, where she suffered a sudden attack, either of apoplexy or heart trouble, while appearing at the Odeon theater, on Thursday evening of this week.

THE VIOLINIST has made at least seven visits to Portland, all but one of which were under the management of the Heilig theater. Her last local appearance was one year ago. During the intervals spent in this city, she was enjoyed by the 500 admirers and a number of personal friends.

MADAME POWELL'S illness, regrettable in the extreme to many Portland friends, is undoubtedly the result of her too conscientious application to her artistic task, said W. T. Pangle of the Heilig. "Only those who are acquainted with her in the most of American violinists—and, of course, the service men before whom she appeared—know the extent of the voluntary appearances she made at American cantonments during the war. Personally, I believe that this extra effort, together with her constant concert engagements, contributed to her collapse."

CONGRESS TO PRESS RADIO CONTROL BILL Orient Badly in Need of Accurate American News.

THREE MEASURES PENDING Conversion of Naval Radio Stations to Commercial Use May Be First Step.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Nov. 28.—Legislation for federal control of the radio systems of this country is likely to be pressed early in the new session of congress, according to a reliable source. As a temporary measure, it is probable that bills will be taken to convert the naval radio station to commercial use.

ORIENT NEEDS FACTS. These two bills provide a low word rate of five cents on news matter for press associations and individual newspapers from Hawaii and the Philippines to the west coast of the United States, and six cents from points on the coast of Asia, which the navy department says is within the zone of transmission.
