

NEGRO SUGAR BUSINESS IN ABATEMENT CASE

Reputation of Golden West Hotel Shown in Court.

DEFENSE SEEKS MOTIVE

Mrs. Beatrice Cannady's Name Is Mentioned by Several Witnesses During Progress of Trial.

Murphy Beasley, a negro with patent leather hair, who is an excellent advertisement for his "hair straightener" for which he said he is agent, was star witness in the prosecution in abatement proceedings brought against the Golden West hotel, Broadway and Flamingo street, before Circuit Judge Morrow yesterday.

Woman's Interest Shown.

When first asked how he happened to be a witness in the case, Beasley insisted that he was testifying entirely of his own volition. Under a fire of cross-questioning from John H. Stevenson and Robert Maguire, he admitted at last that he had been requested to appear by Mrs. Beatrice Cannady, a woman who had aided him to obtain a position as janitor at the North Bank station, a job he still holds after several years.

Other Hotels Drawn In.

"I would like to have the three best hotels in town, as I have heard about them," commented Attorney Stevenson in the examination of Lieutenant G. E. H. Morris, a morals squad. "Is it not true that you have heard virtually the same things concerning the Golden West of the hotels of the city, including some of the best, that you have about the Golden West?"

VIOLA DANA in the farce "Please Get Married."

"Please Get Married," will come to the Strand theater tomorrow. William Russell in "Sacred Silence" will show for the last time today. "Please Get Married" is a play by Helen Hunt, it is a simple pure farce, ingeniously, highly seasoned and the story of a bride and bridegroom against whom fate, parents and the hotel clerk had designs. The story is from the pen of James Cullen and Lewis Allen Brown and after six months on Broadway, where it was produced on the stage by Oliver Morosco, it was still drawing record crowds.

Bryant Washburn, who only last week finished "Too Much Johnson," the screen version of the famous William Gillette comedy, has started the production of "The Six Best Gals," a picture based upon the timely story by Holworthy Hall and Hugh M. Kahler.

Everybody can boast of ancestors, naturally enough, but not many motion-picture favorites can boast of a lineage which includes an authentic lord with a castle and everything—the everything including a town name after the lord, Helen Chadwick, a star in Goldwyn pictures, is one actress in the silent drama who can boast (not that she does) of descent from a real lord.

She was born in the town of Chadwick, N. Y., which took its cognomen from the great-grandfather, Sir Chadwick, an English peer. Her grandfather was a president of the silk mills which have made the town prosperous and her father, an executive in the same mills while her mother, previous to her marriage, was a singer.

The mother must be ascribed the early interest which Helen took in dramatic subjects.

Nearly everybody knows that yellow grease paint has almost universally superseded the use of pink flesh tint for motion picture make-up purposes, but few know why the change was made, nor it came about and who effected it.

The man responsible is Marc McDermott. When Mr. McDermott made his first picture he found that all of the players used a flesh tint, which as he soon discovered, was unsatisfactory in varying lights. It photographed in varying tints, sometimes a chalk-white, often a gray, frequently a blue, and at times a red. This variance an actor sometimes had a chalk-white face when he ran a flight of stairs, or when he entered the room used as a setting for the following scene.

Being something of an amateur photographer and announcement cards, combining photography with sketching, he bought a print of a colored Japanese sketch, photographed it, ran off the required number of prints and was in the act of mounting one of them when his attention was suddenly attracted by the fine natural tint he had obtained from the yellow printing ink used to color the face of one of the characters. Immediately the thought occurred to him: If the yellow printing ink will reproduce to a natural tint, why not yellow grease paint for makeup?

above the stove, and a moment later sheets of flame were rising more than 20 feet into the air. Passerby along Sixth street turned in the alarm, and the blaze was soon under control.

Captain Heath was standing beneath the ladder in the rear of the building when a gas meter exploded. The flames enveloped him for a moment, causing severe and painful burns about his head and body. He was carried to the street and taken first to the police emergency hospital. He was later removed to St. Vincent's hospital, where his condition was said to be improved. He will recover. Several other firemen were burned slightly.

You brush your teeth regularly night and morning, so why is it that there are cavities to be filled?

Money of Doubtful Value. NOME, Alaska.—Russian paper money of half a dozen or more brands was left in Nome last week by sailors given shore leave from Admiral Kolchak's gunboat, the Yakut, when it spent several days here taking on supplies. Bills brought by the sailors carry stamps of the old Russian imperial government, the Kerensky government, the Kolchak administration, the bolshevik officials and several Russian provincial governments. As the money was of doubtful value here none of it passed at face value.
