CELEBRATION SHOWS

Only 9 New Year's Arrests Are for Drunkenness.

QUIET NIGHT, POLICE SAY

Few Portainders Begin 1920 With Morning-After Headaches and "Never Again" as Slogan.

It is safe to say that fewer Portland citizens woke up "the morning after the night before" yesterday with that peculiar feeling about the head, the right hand in the air and those well-known words on their lips, "never again!" than ever before in the history of the city.

In the history of the city.

It was a New Year's celebration to which the "wet goods" of the old time celebrations contributed but little. Here and there an oasis was tapped but most of the celebrations appearently emulated the camel and went without drink.

All this is indusing from that well-went without drink.

All this is judging from that well-known register of social morality, or immortality, the Portland police docket. The police made nine arrests for drunkenness during the right, five arrests on disorderly cho-duct charges. Also Lee A. Senn. salesman, was arrested by Officers Wright and Stiles at Fifth and Col-lege streets, charged with driving an automobile while intoxicated.

It was a quiet night, according to the opinion of the old time members of the police force, who harked back in memory to the time when the ar-rests following New Year's celebrations were only limited by the size of the jall and the ability and aggressiveness of the police officers. Riot Call Fails to Come.

Even compared with New Year's celebrations under the "desert regime," it was a night of little incident at the police station. The belied knights of the police partol, known in customary parlance as cops, waited and waited, but the cuscops, waited and waited, but the cus-tomary riot call falled to come in. Members of the day shift were de-tailed for special duty by Chief of Police Jenkins to watch the down-town crowds New Year's eva. They reported, however, that the crowd was a good natured one, although noisy, and few arrests were neces-

The police court docket of the morning after previous New Year's celebrations might be cited to show just how temperate and law abiding Portland citizens are getting to be, or else just how hard it was to get liquid refreshment with that well-known kick for the New Year's "blow out." For instance, 1917 shows 20 arrests for drunkenness, five for disorderly conduct, one for assault and battery and two for driving an and battery and two for driving an automobile while drunk. For 1918 there were 11 arests for drunken-ness, 19 for disorderly conduct and one for assault and battery. The year 1919 shows a falling off in ar-rests of the New Year's celebration. ut even it exceeds the number taken in this New Year's night. The arrests were for drunkenness, eight for disorderly conduct, two for violation of the prohibition law, one for driving an automobile while drunk, seven for being idlers and

Comparison Is Striking. However, if one would turn to the records of the police court for the days when bars had not become old fashloned and it was still possible to maintain a position in society and yet drink a little now and then, the comparison is still more, striking. Arrests in those days were made only when a man was unable to go home by himself or when he became disorderly, for even policemen in those days were known to take a drink and they had a certain fellow feel-ing for the man who was still able to carry the liquor he had aboard. Those days have changed now, however, for at the present time a man who manages to even get his "nose wet" is the object of such envy that a policeman throws him in jail on sight, according to an old "soak," who asserts he knows.

The police court docket for the 1916 New Year's celebration, the memorable last wet celebration memorable last wet celebration, shows the following arrests: For drunkenness 27, for assault two, for disorderly conduct by fighting four, for discharging firearms in the city limits one, for assault with a dangerous weapon one. Those were the days before moon-shine had supplanted Sunnybrook, before backdoors and secret panels had taken the place of the old swinging front doors of the family bev-erage establishments, before "here's how," had been forgotten, and before the name saloon had been kicked out of the dictionary. Thos the days, but, never again.
