WILL CONTEST CITES 'DEADWEIGHT WIFE'

Letters to Late George Rae Introduced in Court.

SON-IN-LAW IS AUTHOR

"It Was You Who Asked Me to Marry Her" Is Excerpt—More Depositions Are on Way.

"There is one point upon which I would like to refresh your memory. It is that it was not I who asked for your daughter's hand, but it was you who asked me to marry her."

"It would be a different thing had I married a poor man's daughter, but I married a rich man's daughter, and under certain conditions."

Letters written the late George Rae by his son-in-law, T. S. Emerson, in 1914, from which these sentences are taken, were the direct cause of the old man drawing up a will which cut off his adopted daughter, Maud Rae Emerson, and her husband, with $10 of a $100,000 estate, shortly after the receipt of the communications, was the testimony yesterday afternoon of Attorney W. M. Cake, witness for the proponents of the will, in a contest opening last week.

Decision Is Postponed.

All evidence for proponents and contestants closed yesterday with the exception of the depositions of Mr. and Mrs. Rae, which have not been received from Paris, where the couple now are living. Decision on the case was postponed by Circuit Judge Tazwell until after arrival and perusal of the depositions.

The letters were written in July and September, 1914, and the will which virtually disinherited Mrs. Emerson was drawn up December 9, 1914. Emerson, it appeared from evidence, had a pre-nuptial agreement by which he was to receive one-half of any property which might be left his wife. The chief contention of Mrs. Emerson, contestant, has been that the widow of Rae, who was his housekeeper before marriage and traveled with him all over the United States and Europe, unduly influenced her husband by threats of prosecution under the Mann act or disgrace if she did not receive the bulk of his estate.

Mrs. Rae Gives Testimony.

Mrs. Rae, called on the stand in rebuttal yesterday, testified that in her travels with Rae she always paid her own expenses and that she was worth about $15,000 at the time of their trip to Europe together. She positively denied any meretricious relations or passing as his wife before marriage. While serving as his housekeeper she received $25 a month, she said.

The estate is represented by Attorneys E. V. Littlefield, W. M. Cake and W. B. Shively, the contestants by Attorneys James S. Wilson and A. C. Spencer.

R. D. Inman of the Inman-Poulsen Lumber company testified yesterday that Rae, who was in charge of the retail sales of the mill, was a man who was not easily influenced.

In the letters which aroused the wrath of Rae, Emerson, who is a commission merchant of Paris, dealing in "produits alimentaries," attacked acts of Rae in connection with the estate of his late wife, in which Emerson felt he had a share through his wife.

Letter Quotations Cited.

Quotations from his letter of July 1, 1914, follow:

"I can tell you that since we have been in France she (Mrs. Emerson) has cost me a great deal more than what you have sent her. Of course, she tries hard and does the best that she can, but there is one point upon which I would like to refresh your memory. It is that it was not I who asked for your daughter's hand, but it was you who asked me to marry her.

"I told you at the time I did not wish to take a wife to support, as I was a poor young man and had an ambition to go to Paris, but would rather wait a couple of years, but you said never mind, that, I will give Maud at least $100 a month and a little later when you are ready to go in business I will help you. The first you have done, but the second—well, you have said that you were hard up, etc.; I have said nothing, but sawed wood.

"It has been a very hard struggle with me and the going has been slow compared with what it might have been had I had the support you promised. If you think that I have so much the best of it I can make arrangements for Maud to live by herself, or if you wish it you can have her return to live with you.

"Deadweight Wife" Not Wanted.

"There is one thing, to be perfectly frank, and that is that Maud must be able to keep up her end, as my success is in sight and I cannot afford to carry any dead weight, especially as we had all that settled before I married. It would be a different thing had I married a poor man's daughter, but I married a rich man's daughter and under certain conditions."

In the letter of September 8, 1914, Emerson wrote: "I am a joint partner in Maud's inheritance. . . . I have told her that it is likely you are sick, but between us I think you are under undue influence. . . . You must remember that there were many things in your life that designate that you have taken precious care of your own selfish interests. . . . Doing anything against Maud cannot hurt me and she will suffer both from you if you neglect her and from me in making you angry at her because she will live only according to her income, so put that in the pipe and smoke it!"

Last Letter Dated in 1914.

The final letter introduced was dated September 15, 1914, and read: "To be perfectly plain I can support a wife, but the point with me is that I feel I have been imposed upon in this case by different promises you made me before we were married . . . I took a great responsibility off your hands when I married her . . . Then I found after I married the reputation of your family would not help me any and I was glad to get away from Portland. You know what I mean."

The fact that the adopted daughter was completely under the control of her husband led Rae to decide to cut both off in his will, said Attorney Cake, in the course of his testimony.

CAMP CONTROL CHANGED

TACOMA, Wash., Jan. 20.—(Special.)—For the first time since the establishment of Camp Lewis and its control directly from the war department it is now under the jurisdiction of the western department with permanent headquarters in San Francisco, although Camp Lewis is temporarily the headquarters of the department, due to the absence of Lieutenant-General Hunter T. JERSEY SEATS DEMOCRAT

EDWARD I. EDWARDS BECOMES CHIEF EXECUTIVE.

Republican Legislature Urged to Refuse Ratification of Federal Prohibition Amendment.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 20.—Edward I. Edwards, former state senator, was inaugurated at noon today as the first democratic governor of New Jersey since Woodrow Wilson retired to become president. Mr. Edwards, who was elected on a wet platform, in his inaugural address, urged the republican-controlled legislature not to ratify the federal prohibition amendment.

Soon after the inaugural ceremony a prohibition enforcement bill designed to conform with Governor Edwards' contention that the several states have concurrent power to legislate upon the enforcement of the federal prohibition amendment, was introduced in the assembly. The measure defines "intoxicating liquors" as those in excess of 4 per cent alcoholic content.

Ratification of the federal woman suffrage amendment, which Governor Edwards recommended to the state legislature, received a setback when the assembly by a viva voce vote adopted a resolution declaring it to be the policy in the future that all proposed constitutional changes first should be submitted to the people for their vote before the legislature acts.

Not a dissenting vote was registered either by democratic or republican members of the assembly. Political leaders declared that suffrage ratification by New Jersey at this time apparently is impossible.

TESTIMONY IS PERMITTED

Alleged Slayer's Admissions Acceptable at Trial, Is Ruling.

SALEM, Or., Jan. 20.—(Special.)—Admissions by a man, charged with murder, in the presence of a sheriff, if made voluntarily, are admissible at the trial of the defendant, according to a legal opinion given by Attorney-General Brown today. The opinion was asked by R. I. Keator, district attorney of Umatilla county. Mr. Keator said a man charged with second degree murder in Umatilla county while closeted with the sheriff there recently had made statements which were regarded as important in the prosecution of the action.

It was to determine whether these statements would be allowed to go before the jury that the opinion was sought, according to Mr. Keator.
