Libby and Nelson are a galivanting pair who do astonishing things on wheels, bicycles and pieces of bicycles. The closing act is for its first part an artistic exhibition in fancy bareback riding by two pretty, graceful maids and two men—the Four Bostocks. The last half of the act is convulsing in its fun—a demonstration of how circus riders are made. Contestants, six of them, are taught to pirouette on a galloping old white nag and the procedure results in a riot of mirth.
