In his first statement to the com-littee Admiral Sims said the complaints he had to make were con fined largely to the first six or eight months of the war. When today he began discussion of events that occurred in the summer of 1918, he said he did so because Mr. Daniels in a statement had implied Admiral Sims' post in London was "purely a local one."
"The statement was inaccurate,"

Admiral Sims said. In the spring of 1918, he said when the submarine menace had been overcome, naval officials in London became apprehensive that the Germans might, as a last venture. send out battle cruisers in the hope of destroying an American convoy. That this apprehension was felt also at the navy department, he said, was demonstrated by this cablegram
