

EARLY DECISION ON PROHIBITION LIKELY

Supreme Court Judgment in April Expected.

MORE ARGUMENTS HEARD

"Perversion of Constitution," Says Eilihu Root, in Protest Against the Eighteenth Amendment.

WASHINGTON, March 29.—A possibility that the supreme court might pass final judgment on prohibition questions before it by the middle of next month was seen by some observers today in the announcement that the court recess to be taken after arguments on these cases, probably tomorrow, would extend to April 19 instead of April 12.

Further argument on questions touching the validity of the constitutional amendment and the enforcement act was presented today. They were in connection with the original suit brought by New Jersey as well as appeals from that state and Wisconsin. The Rhode Island, Kentucky and Massachusetts cases already have been argued and will be considered at the same time.

Mr. Root characterized the prohibition amendment as new legislation made under "color of an amendment" affecting personal rights. If its validity was upheld, he said, the effect would be that the court recognized in addition to the legislative power of congress and states, a third legislative power, enactment of legislation by consent of three-fourths of the states, which, he said, would be "a perversion not only of the word but of the whole tone of the constitution."

Mr. Root said, "If there be or be not prohibition in this country, it is of vast consequence. However, that your honors now decide rightly and for the good of our country in the future if there are to be any limits to the power of amendment and where the line of limitation is to be drawn."

Mr. Root argued that the original bill of rights on which the federal constitution was founded would be swept away if the amendment were sustained, and laws enacted as constitutional amendments would be made superior to other laws. This would mean, he added, that "we are not a government of limited powers because there is a legislative body that is not subject to those limitations."

Super-Legislation Seen. Mr. Root argued that the original bill of rights on which the federal constitution was founded would be swept away if the amendment were sustained, and laws enacted as constitutional amendments would be made superior to other laws.

Replying to an inquiry by Associate Justice Day, Mr. Root said that only two ways existed to insert a prohibition amendment in the constitution to transfer power to regulate the liquor traffic to congress as was done regarding interstate commerce or to call a convention to propose amendments on the same authority, as was done for the original constitution.

BELGIAN WOMAN FINDS HER HOME REMEDY HERE

Early recognition of the symptoms of anemia will often save a great deal of worry and avoid much sickness and suffering. Thin-blooded people who are weakened to the point where exhaustion follows slight effort sometimes notice a fluttering and palpitation of the heart. This often leads them to fear that they have heart trouble. Anemia is very often accompanied by indigestion. This leads sufferers to think they have organic stomach trouble.

In most of these cases all that is needed is a reliable tonic that will replenish and build up the blood that it can carry nourishment to the organs that are suffering because of a lack of the vital fluid. Try the remedy that Mrs. Cornelia DeHeer of No. 2225 Lincoln avenue, Ogden, Utah, recommends and see how speedily the entire system is toned up when the blood becomes rich and well-oxygenated.

P. R. DEADY FUNERAL SET

ATTORNEY SUCCEUMS SUDDENLY IN MOTHER'S ROOMS.

Funeral Will Be Held Today at Trinity Episcopal Church With Interment in Riverside.

The funeral of Paul R. Deady, well-known Portland attorney, will be held this afternoon, at 2 o'clock, from Trinity Episcopal church, with interment in Riverview cemetery.

Mr. Deady's death came with startling suddenness late Sunday afternoon, at the apartment of his mother, Mrs. Matthew P. Deady of Alexandria, Va.

After dining downtown he walked up Washington street to Alexandria court, accompanied by Robert J. Linden. He complained of illness, but did not seem seriously affected. At Alexandria court he parted from Mr. Lindley and went to his mother's apartments.

Mr. Deady had entered the room when his attack became acute, and medical aid was summoned, but he died within a few minutes. He was a native of Oregon, son of the late Judge Matthew P. Deady and was born in Umpqua, Douglas county, while his father was holding court there.

Mr. Deady came to Portland with his parents while yet in boyhood, and spent most of his life here. He practiced law for many years, with offices in the Chamber of Commerce building, retiring three years ago.

He is survived by his mother, by one brother, Dr. Henderson B. Deady of New York and by his widow, Mrs. Paul R. Deady, of Palo Alto, Cal.

Active pallbearers will be nephews and cousins of Mr. Deady. They are Matthew P. Deady, Hanover Deady, Seth Carlin, George Holman, Henry Failing, R. R. McAlpin, Robert H. Strong and Frederick H. Strong.

RAILWAY EXCHANGE BUILDING TRADED ON $250,000 DEAL.

Western Grain Company Gets Title to Fine Wheat Tract in Gilliam County.

An empire of wheat land in Gilliam county, and the transfer of a majority interest in the stock of the Railway Exchange Investment company, leasehold owners of the Railway Exchange building, Third and Stark streets, figure in a deal just consummated in this city, through the agency of H. H. Urdahl, of the H. H. Urdahl company, Inc.

By the transfer the Western Grain company, newly incorporated, becomes owner of 5800 acres of cultivated wheat land in Gilliam county, sold by the Beaver Land-Stock company of Portland. The land lies near Bialok in one of the largest wheat areas of eastern Oregon.

It is understood that the payment included transfer of controlling interest, or 60 per cent, of the capital stock of the Railway Exchange Investment company, with the valuation of the building fixed at $750,000. An

CHEAP WOOL NOT COMING

EXPERT SAYS ENGLAND'S HAS SITUATION IN HAND.

Clothing in Great Demand Everywhere Throughout Europe and Wages in America High.

Press up your little old last year's suit, or prepare to buy another at the market price—for the price of wool garments is now going to slump in many a long month to come.

Such is the substance of the opinion held by Dr. Smith, vice-president of the Kirschbaum company, New York and Philadelphia, one of the largest clothing concerns in the country. Mr. May, who is at the Hotel Benson during a visit to this city, is particularly qualified to speak—as much as he has charge of the woolen purchasing department of his company.

"Present prices of clean wool," said Mr. May, "are around $2 a pound. Back in 1914 the price was 35 cents. None of the wool at $2 a pound, that enters into clothing, will go into cloth until next spring. It must pass through the spinner and the weaver. We look for delivery late in 1920 or early in 1921."

"The price of wool depends upon the mood of England, which controls the wool market through the tremendous Australian clip. The English government has the situation well in hand and appears to be desirous of maintaining the present price, and is possessed of fine farm buildings. For more than two months the transfer has been pending."

Mr. Urdahl recently negotiated the sale of 800 acres of potato land near Redmond, at a price exceeding $75,000, the purchaser being George L. Burt of San Francisco.

"Why should a child of Edith's age have to wear glasses Doctor?"

I ASKED the eye specialist the question before speaking. "You know," he answered, "or more correctly speaking, you probably do not know that we are all more or less the victims of glare and eye-strain. They are insidious enemies of the eyes, at work every waking hour of the day; especially active during the hours that we spend under artificial light."

Healthy child, normal in every other way, should have to wear glasses at the age of twelve.

The kindly old specialist leaned back and thought a moment before speaking. "You know," he answered, "or more correctly speaking, you probably do not know that we are all more or less the victims of glare and eye-strain. They are insidious enemies of the eyes, at work every waking hour of the day; especially active during the hours that we spend under artificial light."

"It used to be true of my home, and I suppose it is of yours, that the lighting consisted of glowing spots of light spaced at different places in the room, close enough together to relieve the murkiness and make the darkness visible. No attention was paid to the fact that these spots of glare were highly irritating to the eye, both in themselves and where they were reflected from mirrors and polished surfaces. We all thought that it was one of the discomforts of life that had to be put up with, like the dog days, and mosquitoes."

"And then the other extreme that we all swung to in trying to escape glare was the under-lighted room. This was just as irritating, as injurious and just as productive of eye-strain as over-lighting. It seemed that there was no happy medium. You notice that I say seemed; it is because I have found a way, which, by combining the good qualities of direct and indirect lighting eliminates both glare and gloom. There is so much done nowadays in the way of preventive medicine, that I really regard this new lighting system in that way. I prescribe it as readily as I do glasses, because prevention is so much more effective than remedy."

"Here's a card with the name of this new system on it, and the address of the electrical firm that I have found a can save you."

I looked at the card as soon as I was outside. The name written on it was Duplexite. The minute I got home I telephoned to the electrician. He asked me the size of my room, general color of scheme, and whether the ceiling was light colored. Later that afternoon he arrived and much to my surprise only carried a few cartons under his arm. He said that the only way to appreciate the value of Duplexite lighting was to see it, and so I agreed to let him put up a sample in my living room.

He opened one carton, took out the Duplexite, and explained it thoroughly to me as he was working. He said: "You see in the first place you should use a Mazda C lamp if you want to get all the light out of the current you pay for; then, because the lamp is so very bright and powerful, this Duplexite is designed with the circular metal deflector to cut off strong rays from the eyes and direct them to the ceiling for indirect distribution. The flat glass disc fits under the bottom of the deflector and diffuses the direct light coming straight down, and that was about all there was to it—very simple and so practical—another of these things that make you wonder why we never had one before. This is what my husband will call simply another application of straight line reasoning."

Well, it did not take any longer to install Duplexite than to let me about it and so in just a few minutes he switched on the light and I received the real surprise of my life. For it seemed as if the sun had come back over the horizon and bathed the room in soft radiance. It was unlike any artificial light that I had ever seen. The room was filled with a soft brilliancy that clearly illuminated every object in it, and yet the light itself was so soft that it was really the most comfortable light that I had ever known.

It was true that there was no possible chance for eye-strain under a Duplexite.

We have lived with Duplexite for two weeks now, and are so delighted with it that we have had them installed throughout the house. And my only regret is that we did not hear of Duplexite before—that it had not been necessary for little Edith to injure her eyesight before we woke up to the necessity of good illumination.
