When a champion boxer falls and is "down and out" for good, he becomes a mark for many of the aspiring fighters in his class.

Years Make Difference. Dillon never asked about how much the other fellow weighed, although he never scaled over 150 to 165 himself and could make the middleweight limit of 158 pounds if necessary.

From all accounts, Paul Roman is a fairly good middleweight, but he is not helping his record by giving glow.

THE OTHER day a letter and clipping from the manager of Paul Roman, Kansas City middleweight, was sent broadcast stating that he had given Jack Dillon a severe beating, knocking him down twice and "accomplishing something no other boxer ever did."
