

STATE BAR TRIAL BY J. S.

Important Ruling Made by Federal Court.

JEOPARDY LIMIT CITED

Judge Bean Annuls One Indictment in Jenkins Case, but O. K. All Not in First Trial.

If a person is tried in the state court on a state liquor charge and acquitted he cannot be taken into federal court and prosecuted on the same charge by reason of former jeopardy.

This important decision relative to the national and state prohibition laws was handed down orally yesterday by Federal Judge Bean during the trial of Clyde Jenkins, under federal indictment for an alleged violation of the national prohibition act.

After the government had prosecuted its complete case to the jury Paul M. Long, attorney for Jenkins, moved for a dismissal of the first count in the federal indictment by reason of the former jeopardy.

The federal authorities then took charge of the case and returned an indictment, the first count of which contained the same charge of possession of liquor illegally.

Judge Bean held that the federal prohibition amendment which states that both the government and states shall have concurrent jurisdiction in the prosecution of liquor violations means that the power of each were identical and that if a man were prosecuted by one sovereignty he could not be compelled to face trial on the same charge by the other.

Prosecuting officials and attorneys generally consider this an important decision with regard to future prosecutions of liquor violators.

Case Allowed to Go to Jury. Two other counts in the indictment against Jenkins contained charges which are not covered by state laws and for that reason Judge Bean allowed the case to go to the jury on the two additional counts.

Jenkins is alleged to have manufactured nearly 500 gallons of gin which were sold in Portland from December until his arrest, January 17. He is alleged to have operated at 21 Tenth street a small distillery.

Jenkins, through his attorney, alleged that he also arrested his sweetheart and took her to jail. After she had become a lunatic he placed her in solitary confinement and denied the privilege of seeing an attorney or friends.

Defense Attorney Long charged that the alleged confession was obtained by use of "third degree" methods and that Jenkins had been placed in solitary confinement and denied the privilege of seeing an attorney or friends.

Revenue agents, on the witness stand, denied using "third degree" methods. The case was expected to be completed early today.
