In a cottage to be crected next week at Sixth street and Yamhill the automobile committee of the Shrine will dispense information to the thousands who will drive in here during the convention week, according to an announcement yesterday by Ira L. Powers, chairman of the committee.

"Every possible attention will be paid to the visitors," said Mr. Powers, "and that is the reason we will be located in the downtown district so as to be close to the center of things. We will have an efficient force on hand at all times to care for the visitors who will drive in by auto. Directions will be given and as routes already have been laid out the auto trips will be so arranged as to make it possible to look after all who desire to journey over Portland's highways."

How many motion picture fans are thoroughly tired of seeing every production and happily, with the hero and his mate walking slowly into the tivilight or in loving embrace as the final chemical fadeout spells the conclusion?

Erich von Stroheim, the man who produced "Blind Husbands," believes that the great army of theater-goers are ready for logical finales in the single drama.

"Every episode of life does not end happily," Mr. Von Stroheim said in an interview recently. "Rosy-tinted romances are not for everyone. Life is a hard school and delivers hard punches."
