Reason for Making Slacker Charges Told to Court.

DESIRE FOR MONEY DENIED

Woman Unshaken in Testimony That She Received Only $900 When Questionnaire Signed.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 10.—(Special.)—How much money did Jack Dempsey send to Maxine Dempsey during the years 1917 and 1918? Over this point hours of cross-examination developed today in the famous trial of the champion on draft evasion charges after Judge Maurice T. Doering had ruled that the divorced wife might testify to matters not privileged communications and had held that the sending of money was not such a communication.

Maxine said at first that Jack Dempsey sent her $200 during the dates of January 25, 1918, when she signed the supporting affidavit of his questionnaire, and November, 1918, when they finally separated.

Under a cross-examination by Gavin McNab she qualified her statement to say that she "guessed" it was about $900. She could not remember specific amounts or dates, but somehow, in a manner that even McNab's questions could not extract, she brought the total to $900.

Western Union Men Testify.
The defense asserts that she really received at least $1500 during this time. Three Western Union men from Salt Lake City, introduced at this time by permission of the court, might return to duty, testified that Maxine Dempsey received many remittances by wire from Jack, so many that they noted her as a frequent visitor to the office.

J. B. McCloud, office manager, produced records of money sent from other cities by Jack Dempsey. R. L. Burton, cashier, said that Maxine and Mrs. Celia Dempsey, Jack's mother, both received money, but that Maxine came more often than Mrs. Dempsey.

"After the date of the Fulton fight Maxine Dempsey got $200," said Burton. "I remember, because she said that Fulton must have hit Jack hard to jar him loose from $200."

"Didn't you say to Beulah and Peggy Murray at Wells," demanded McNab "that you had read in the papers that Dempsey would get $250,000 for the Carpenter fight and that you were going to have $100,000 of it, or else you would drag Jack down to the same level as yourself?"

"There was a discussion, but I did not say that," answered Maxine. "I didn't pay any attention to it; I knew Jack would never part with $40,000."

"Why did you want to make your charges against Jack public until just when you did?" asked McNab.

"We hadn't written to each other for a long time," she answered. "I made a photograph of myself, and it made me mad," answered Maxine. "I did not care what I did."

Earlier in the day the curious audience had its longing for unpleasantness satisfied. Maxine Dempsey told the story of her life from the time she met Jack Dempsey in Salt Lake City until the present. The only thing that made it different from the stories of other women of Maxine's profession was the apparent enjoyment with which she told it. Her eager was she to dwell on the sordid details of her life in one city after another that she ran ahead of questions to make it unmistakably clear that when she and Jack Dempsey had drifted apart after a few months of life together, she made a bee-line for Nevada, where, apparently, she was most at home.

Under cross-examination Maxine admitted, although with noticeable reluctance, that during these months when she and Jack were together he paid the bills.

In addition to her declaration of non-support, one other point adverse to Dempsey crossed into the record through Maxine's testimony. The dislocated jaw for which she was treated at a San Francisco hospital, the result of a blow struck by Jack.

"I hadn't made any money and he knocked me down," she mentioned. It seemed to embarrass him.

Although the government has admittedly suffered a heavy blow in the rule barring the letters and other testimony by Maxine Dempsey, the trial is producing a mass of testimony and evidence. The question is how much weight the jury will give this testimony in the light of the fact that Jack Dempsey is facing trial, not for non-support, not for anything in his relations with his wife, but on charges of evading the draft and conspiring to bring about such evasion.

ARRANZA'S DEATH CAUSE OF INQUIRY

Five Bullet Holes Found in Wall of Hut.

SUICIDE THEORY SCOUTED

Former Minister of War Testifies Before Military Court Now Holding Sessions.

TLAXCALANTONGO, State of Puebla, Mexico, June 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Indian residents of Tlaxcalantongo, where President Carranza met his death on the morning of May 21, scout the theory that he committed suicide and declare that no real defense was made of the president.

No official investigation has been made here into the death of Carranza. Indians interviewed by the Associated Press correspondent, who was the first newspaperman to visit the scene pointed out the hut which they said had been assigned to the president by General Rodolfo Herrero, who has been charged with responsibility for the death of the late executive. It is built of fragile material and is located far from the quarters of the soldiers whose duty it was to protect him. The Indians asserted there were stone houses available, to which the president might have been assigned.

Investigation by the correspondent showed five bullet holes through the thin wooden wall of the hut in a corner where it was said Carranza slept. One bullet is reported to have struck him in the leg, and according to belief here, when he sat up he was hit by the other four.

Thirty bullet holes were counted in various parts of the hut. Near the door is one which is said to mark the spot where Carranza's guard was killed. Although the hut had been used as the mayor's office before Carranza's arrival, it was furnished only with a table, and the bare ground was its floor. On the ground is a cross mark, indicating the spot where Carranza's body lay. A candle has been placed beside this cross and it is kept lighted by Senora Virginia Vargas de Luna, whose 15-year-old son was killed by a stray bullet during the attack.

President Carranza reached Tlaxcalantongo at about 3:30 o'clock on the afternoon of May 20, according to an Indian couple at whose home 19 of his escort were quartered. The president was heavily cloaked but was recognized by his white beard.

About 1:30 o'clock next morning the couple heard firing in the village and fled.

Evidence of Disorder Found.
They returned seven hours later to find evidence of the disorder which had taken place.

Three hundred yards from where Carranza slept is a hut pointed to by the Indians as one occupied by Ygnacio Bonilla, former Mexican ambassador at Washington, who was one of President Carranza's companions in his flight from Mexico City.

According to the stories told by the natives, Bonillas remained in his hut throughout the night and in the morning cut a hole in the wall to see how the land lay and then escaped.

Tlaxcalantongo is difficult to reach. A train runs from Mexico City to Beristain and from there the traveler must go by automobile or railway line to Necaxa. It is then a 15-mile horseback ride over rough roads to this town.

Rumors have been heard that bandits are operating in the region, but to evidence of them was encountered by the correspondent.

Military Court Takes Evidence.
To have defended Carranza at Tlaxcalantongo on the morning of May 21 would have been a useless sacrifice," General Francisco Murguía, the former minister of war, who accompanied the late president on his flight, declared yesterday before the military court investigating Carranza's death.

General Murguía denied having any connection with the disappearance of national funds and he knew of no guarantee having been received by Carranza regarding his safety if the president ceased his hostile attitude toward the revolution.

In a report to President de la Huerta, Pablo Gonzales says that if certain documents had reached Carranza's hands the latter's life would have been saved. It is presumed that he refers to the guarantees mentioned by General Murguía.

General Herrero testified today for several hours before the military court, but his testimony was not made public.

HUNTINGTON, Or., June 10.—(Special.)—As a result of a wreck, Engineer Robbs is dead, with Fireman Connor and Marshall Smith, call boy in Avery, in a critical condition. The exact cause of the wreck is not known, but investigations are pending.

The wreck occurred two and one-half miles west of Huntington, between 9 and 10 P. M. Wednesday. It was the helper engine that helps freights over the mountains between here and Baker.

The engine jumped the track, following the ground for a distance of 150 feet, finally turning turtle over an embankment. The sand some was blown nearly 100 feet from the scene of the wreck. The engine was completely demolished.

Fireman Connor jumped from the engine when he saw that the engineer had lost control. Call Boy Smith, pulling his cap over his face to protect himself from the boiling water, also jumped, but not before his arms, feet and face were badly scalded.

Engineer Robbs remained with the engine and was pinned beneath the wreckage, later being removed by the rescue party that was rushed from Huntington.

Local No. 24 was speeding towards this station. Young Smith ran one-half mile to flag the oncoming train. A special train was made up and the two injured men rushed to the hospital in La Grande, Or.
