Alaska Salmon Industry Is Held Imperiled.

SEATTLE MEETING OPENS!

Scientists Representing All Sections of Coast and Northwest Confer in Sound City

SEATTLE, June 17 .- That the valuable Alaskan salmon industry, which will yield "billions in the years to is doomed unless means are taken to assist nature in conserving the supply, was one of the outstanding statements of a paper read today by Dr. Barton Warren Evermann, San Francisco, director of the California Academy of Sciences at the division of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at the University of Washington.

The meeting, which will last three days, has brought to Seattle noted men of science from the Pacific coast and northwest to discuss science as applied to the practicalities of every-day life of the average citizen.

applied to the practicalities of every-day life of the average citizen.

If the 14 section meetings scheduled for today interest centered chiefly in a discussion on the "Animal and Plant Resources of the North Pacific Ocean," of which one of the features was Dr. Evermann's paper.

Necessity for the work of specialists in all branches of biology in intelligent conservation of the fisheries industry in general was discussed by Dr. C. McLean Fraser, director of the biological station, Nanaimo, B. C. He advocated the same research work in connection with the fishing industry that is provided for the farming industry through the United States department of agriculture.

W. F. Thompson, fisheries investigator for the California fish and game commission, said developments in fishery science show that the fishing industry is in need of constant supervision to prevent overfishing.

Willis H. Rich, field assistant, United States bureau of fisheries, said conservation of the fishing resources of the Pacific coast is hampered by lack of accurate scientific information. If the salmon resources are to be perpetuated, he said, new nformation. If the salmon resource are to be perpetuated, he said, new methods of fishing must be adopted and care taken not to permit commercial fishing to exhaust any particular tions and through them with the na-locality.
