FEE ON TRANSFER OF CHECKS AVOIDED

Federal Reserve Bank Finds Loophole.

EXPRESS COMPANY USED

Collections on Institutions Refusing to Remit at Par Is Made Through Agent.

Since July 1 the federal reserve bank has been collecting some checks in Oregon and Washington at par through the express companies, and thereby hangs a story. It seems that up to July 1 there were 26 banks in Oregon that refused to make what are called "money transfers" without first deducting a certain fee, usually 10 cents an item or in many instances, 10 cents on the $100. This is what caused the trouble, according to Charles H. Stewart, assistant deputy governor of the federal reserve bank of San Francisco, who is in Portland at the present time. Today there are about six banks in Oregon that refuse to pay checks at par, but it is thought that the majority of these will perhaps come into the federal reserve system, if eligible, or will at least consent to payment of checks received by them in the usual course of business, at par.

According to Mr. Stewart, the federal reserve bank has argued the question from every angle with these banks, generally small ones located in small places, but without success.

Express Company Collects.

The contention made by the country banks referred to is that checks drawn on their institutions are payable over their counters in the towns where located, and that checks drawn on them by their depositors who may reside in other localities, or who may be away from town, and which are handled through other banks can only be handled through the imposition of a fee, the amount of which is usually 10 cents on the $100, though in any number of cases it has been 10 cents an item, regardless of whether the face value of the check calls for $1 or $100.

In order, therefore, to overcome this contention, the federal reserve bank sends no collections to such banks through the ordinary course of mails. This is because the federal reserve bank is prohibited by law from collecting other than at par. The result is, when checks on these banks are received by the federal reserve bank, they are in turn given to the express company for collection. The express agent located in the town in which is the offending bank presents these checks for payment, and this again causes a prolonged howl from the small bank. It often does not have the amount in cash called for on hand, as often there are quite a number of checks presented at the same time.

True, it has funds on deposit with its Portland correspondent bank, but even if the Portland bank tenders the full amount called for by the express agent holding the checks for collection to the federal reserve bank the latter will refuse to accept same, contending that such payment must be made in the town where the bank on which the checks are drawn is located, and that if such bank does not pay those checks by 3 P. M. of the day on which presented they will be immediately protested.

Bank Must Collect at Par.

"But," says Mr. Stewart, "in following this custom we are only complying with the contentions made by the banks themselves, and if they fail to maintain a sufficient balance on hand with which to meet their customers' paper merely it can be no fault of ours, for we positively will not and cannot, under the law, collect other than at par." When asked how the expense of collecting through the express company was taken care of, he replied that it was absorbed as an expense of doing business, but that regardless of what it costs the reserve bank to collect the checks, the member bank which turned them over to the reserve bank for collection lost nothing.

On the other hand the banks in the country towns making the collection charge say that it is necessary that they do so in order to transfer the funds called for by the checks to the money center, that is, to the banks having the checks for collection. This statement is met by the federal reserve bank with the statement that no actual transfer of money is ever made, and that the only thing done is simply the drawing of a check by the paying bank on its Portland correspondent, and that no expense is involved therefrom.

A bill is before congress now, introduced by Representative Steagall (house resolution No. 12379), the purpose of which allows all banks, federal and state, to exact a charge of 10 cents a $100 or fraction thereof for collections and payments, the bill being fathered by banks located in southern states.

Manufacturing interests throughout the country are waging a fight against the enactment of this bill into law. The Portland Chamber of Commerce will have the matter before its board of directors next Wednesday evening, at which time some action is expected to be taken.

Police Chief Out for Sheriff.

HOQUIAM, Wash., Aug. 1.—(Special.)—Jess L. Havens, local police chief, announced today that early this week he will file his candidacy for the nomination for sheriff on the republican ticket. Mr. Havens, who came to the harbor 20 years ago from Michigan, resided for 17 years in Hoquiam and was assistant postmaster here for 10 years, resigning January 1, 1917, to become police chief.
