Instead, the people of Portland are becoming students of psychology. The thirst for knowledge of life as it is today is supplanting an erstwhile desire to delve into the psychic unknown.

Psychic Books Decline.

Psychic Books Decline.

This sudden switch in the taste of Portland's reading public was made known last night in the report of Miss Zulema Kostomiatsky, acting librarian, at the regular monthly meeting of the library board. During July, the report sets forth, there has been a very decided decrease in the demand for books on psychic research, while the requests for books on psychology have shown a proportionate increase.

chology have shown a proportionate increase.

Likewise, the July patrons of the library have shown a higher moral tone in their calls for books than during preceding months. The foreigner during vacation days is procuring books on biography and drama in order not to deteriorate during the summer months; the young man asked for novels of the highest moral tone that he might advance mentally and intellectually; even the budding poet sought many books of reference in order that he might better woo the snuse.

Another encouraging sign, as noted by the library barometer, is that peo-ple are asking more for books on out-door life and outdoor games, while books on indoor games are not in such books on indoor games are not in such demand as during former months. Then too, there is an unprecedented demand for books having complete plans for the building of bungalows with built-in furniture.

"It's a healthy sign, and a good one." commented members of the board upon the reading of the report. But while the tastes of the Portland reading public are becoming more normal than at any time since the war, the library staff listelf is facing a condition which may seriously handicap the efficiency of the library during the coming year.
