A civil administration is attached to the headquarters of each army corps charged with the duty of establishing a civil government in the area occupied by the corps.

The text of a statement explaining the aims of Wrangel, issued by him recently upon the occupation of a town in southern Russia, was re-eved here today by officials. "We are fighting," General Wran-gel declared, "first for the orthodox religion as a symbol of our national-ity; second, against those red com-missaires who have filled Russia day. with blood and who, instead of giving liberty to the people, have only given slavery; third, that each peasant shall receive as his own land that on which he is working; fourth, that on which he is working, fourth, that every honest workman may obtain from his labor a good existence and comfort for his old age; fifth, that the peasant people may choose for themselves a master to rule them."
