

MOUNT HOOD LOOP ROUTES INSPECTED

County and State Highway Commissioners on Trip.

CHOICE IS NEXT MOVE

Question of Whether to Use North or South Route Will Be Threshed Out by Body.

Inspection of both the proposed routes for the Mount Hood loop road by county commissioners and members of the state highway commission was completed late yesterday and the joint body will settle down to thrashing out the question as to whether the north or south route will be the one completely adopted.

The southern route, which is favored by Clackamas county residents, has seemed most favored by the Multnomah county commissioners. Members of the party last night declined to give their opinions, but the trip had been planned in order that the district through which the north, or Hull Run route, would pass, might receive fair show.

Tried but enthusiastic over the proposed road, the party arrived in Portland late last night from Hood River after a two-day trip by automobile and on horseback over the proposed routes.

State Highway Commissioners Both and Kiddle and County Commissioners Holman, Muck and Hoyt, and District Attorney Evans and George W. Joseph were members of the investigation committee, which left Portland Monday morning. At Hood River they were joined by Leslie Butler and State Senator J. R. Nickelsen.

The party went from Hood River to Mount Hood lodge, where they passed the night. Yesterday morning the party traveled on horseback from Mount Hood lodge to Government camp over the ranger trail through the national forest, returning via Hood River by automobile.

Individually the members of the committee expressed themselves as favorable toward the project in general, although in the progress of the trip the party was split up and prior to their arrival in Portland last night had been unable to compare notes on their impressions.

Holman Enthusiastic Over Road. Commissioner Holman, who has always been in favor of the route through Sandy, Clackamas county, was enthusiastic over the possibilities of the road.

"The Mount Hood loop road, as we went over it, would undoubtedly be of immense value to the interior country beyond the Cascades," declared Holman. "Beyond Summit road, as scheduled, will branch one, leading into the interior, which will cut off at least 20 miles of travel to Portland road, while the left branch will return by way of the Hood river valley after a two-day trip over the loop around Mount Hood. Aside from the immense value to that interior country, in my opinion, the Columbia highway will not be completed without this addition."

"On the slopes of Mount Hood the proposed road will be one of the finest scenery in the Cascades, as immense forests and natural meadows will border the route. It will be able to capitalize Mount Hood as Mount Rainier has been capitalized," State Highway Commissioner Kiddle was favorably impressed by the trip over the ranger trail to Government camp, and was of the opinion that the route in that direction would make a wonderful scenic attraction, albeit an expensive one.

The committee is scheduled to make a decision on the question on August 24.

HOOPER VISITS OLD HOME

izing the departments and attaining the ideal in a democracy. "Faded with the group that constituted his ministry were opposed to the onslaught on Russia. It was the military party that insisted upon making the attempt to extend beyond the ethnological boundaries of Poland. If we had had the league of nations with some unity of action, the great powers I do not believe that Poland would ever have made that blunder. No unity of action, I give you, I don't know whether our government gave any advice at all. I know that in the commercial aspects of the war, and that England did. As to what France did I have no positive knowledge."

Interest Seen in Poland. "We certainly have some interest, as far away as Poland is. We are interested in the commercial aspects of the developments that are taking place, but we are also concerned through the danger of a large, militarized Poland against a militarized Germany. We have just finished one war against militarism and we do not want another one."

"The military party of Poland always contended that the bolsheviks of Russia were joining with Germany for a fight on them and that they were obliged to strike first. We want to deal justly with them and that was their belief, but I have never agreed with the opinion."

"I have always contended that military invasion of Russia by anyone was a mistake, from the sending of troops to the relief of Kolchak, sending troops to Archangel and all the way around; it has only served to bolster up the strength of the bolshevik government by bringing to its support the ex-soldiers and their officers, who responded to it when they thought it was for defense of their country."

Polen Declared Hardest Hit. "We have never believed that we or anyone else should have interfered in Russia. It is one of those ferments that will work itself out eventually, if let alone."

"The Poles have suffered more from war than any other people. Between three and five million people have died as a result of war. Our government and people have spent about $25,000,000 to help the Polish people to get on their feet. At the present time, I am directing the work of feeding the children. Of this number about 700,000 are in the area now overrun by the bolsheviks."

"We had expected to be faced with the harvest that is now being gathered in Poland the country would become self-sustaining. But the bolsheviks, even though peace is made with Poland, will undoubtedly help themselves to the products of the harvests in that area, and it will in a large measure put off the time when the country can feed itself another year."

World to Face Big Task. "The world is going to be faced with the necessity of feeding ten or twelve million people who are facing starvation."

tion again after they were just about to become self-supporting. "The child question is a problem of cattle and goats. Children can't thrive without milk. We have been shipping cattle there and the Polish government distributed them. They were making rapid progress in raising goats. The bolsheviks have eaten up their own cattle and now will seize the livestock of that area in Poland they have invaded. That puts the whole child life in the country in jeopardy."

"Bolshevism, or communism, or whatever you choose to call it, as a social panacea has collapsed already, because with no form of socialism can production by the people be maintained. In Russia the bolsheviks have gone back to capitalism. They have established property rights, a land, a differential wage and savings banks."

Work Done by Charity. "The relief of children in Europe has been accomplished since August 1, 1918, without financial help being extended by the United States government. It has been the support given by benevolence, that and by various devices to which we have resorted to keep the work going during that time we have withdrawn the assistance from Slavonia, Estonia, Finland, Hungary and parts of Czech-Slovakia and the others of the Balkan states."

"We have up to August 1, 1920, a total of 3,500,000 children. We have now reduced this number to 1,750,000, and but for the turn of affairs in Poland we would have been very much more reduced than it now promises to be. In the year after the armistice government gave a credit of $2,000,000,000. During the year ended August 1, 1919, the credit was cut to about $150,000,000, which included the sale of a lot of army stores of the United States that were in Europe. But for the Polish situation, I think that private aid for this year would amount to about $100,000,000. It is a criterion of improved conditions."

TAX CHANGES ADVISED

JAPANESE DRIVER OF DEATH CAR IS HELD

Coroner's Jury Says T. Oki Saw Child in Time.

DEFECTIVE BRAKES FOUND

Witnesses Disagree as to Speed of Machine and Manner of Its Control.

T. Oki, Japanese furniture dealer and driver of the Ford truck alleged to have struck and killed 3-year-old Roy McElhaney on Harrison street near the park blocks Monday, was bound over to the grand jury last night following a coroner's inquest. The jury found that death was due to the driver's carelessness and pressed themselves of the opinion that the accident could have been avoided had Oki used care and stopped his automobile, as he saw the child at least 60 feet before the impact. He was also held responsible, due to driving with defective brakes.

Witnesses called were C. E. Crowe, who was riding with Oki; Rebecca Braumbaugh, Harry Jackson, Iva Morrison, W. T. Clink, T. C. Frelberg, police sergeant, and the coroner. The defendant, Testimony disagreed, witnesses saying that the machine ran several lengths before stopping after the impact, while Oki maintained he stopped twice.

Crowe testified that the furniture dealer did not put on the brakes until he struck the child, and that both wheels went over the boy, who was four lying on his face, unconscious. Frieberg said investigation showed the brakes were defective and that the machine ran 75 feet when they were applied, and that the boy was struck by the front end of the car. Oki admitted he had seen the boy in the street when three-quarters of a block distant, but that he was going south at the time and suddenly turned north when the automobile was opposite him, thus colliding with the child. The machine was being driven at not more than 15 miles an hour; Oki maintained less.
