LOSS ON BOTTLES HEAVY

Growth of Dairy Industry in Oregon Shows Tremendous Gains in Production.

Price, quality and quantity of the Portland and Oregon milk supply rests ultimately with the consumers, according to the address delivered yesterday by William D. Wheelwright, president of the Portland Damascus Milk company, at the luncheon of the Women's Ad club held in the Benson hotel.

"Oregon is building up the dairy industry in such a manner as bids fair to make this state one of the most important in the Union so far as milk is concerned," said Mr. Wheelwright. "Statistics show that in 1914 the state produced 409,000,000 pounds of butter; in 1918 the total was 691,000,000 pounds, while last year it was 719,000,000 pounds.

"It certainly would be a disaster to the material prosperity of the country and a still greater calamity to the national health and strength if anything should happen to destroy or injure materially this flourishing and growing industry. And such disaster most certainly will occur if the price of milk from any cause whatever declines to a point that will discourage the farmer so he will retire from the dairy business and devote his attention to other kinds of farming.

Bottle Loss Is Waste. "If things were left to themselves it would seem as if natural competition and the regard that the dairyman, the distributor and the producer-distributor each have for his own interest, and the permanence of his business would insure a full milk supply for the citizens of Portland, a living price to the suppliers and a reasonable cost to the consumers.
