Further Statement Making Clear Senator's Views on Problem Is Expected Shortly.

BY MARK SULLIVAN. (Copyright by the New York Evening Post, ins. Published by Arrangement) NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—(Special.)— Libu Root is expected to arrive in New York on the steamer Rotterdam amorrow. Considering the part Mr.

Concerning the new court of inter-national justice which Mr. Root, as the agent for the league of nations, has been dominant in forming, much of comment in American papers has been wide of the mark. Some of the more excitable repubsome of the more excitable repun-lican papers have stated that since this court as an agency of the league of nations they will have none of it. It may safely be said that this ex-treme irreconcliable attitude is not some of his previous public utterances, to know that Mr. Root believes that the league has grave faults. But it can be inferred with equal confidence from a close study of the structure of the court which Mr. Root (Continued From First Page.)

structure of the court which Mr. Root has just set up that he believes certain parts of the league of nations are useful and ought to be preserved and can be preserved.

There are two or three high spots in what Mr. Root has just done which have unmistakable significance. In the first place, Mr. Root revived and set on its feet the old Hague court of arbitration of 1897 and 1907. This Hague court is a different institution from the new court of international justice. American comment has frequently confused the two. The difference between a court of arbitration and a court of justice is too technical to go into here. It is sufficient to say that the Hague court of arbitration expired with the beginning of the war, in 1914, and has not since opened its doors until M. Root revived it and set it to functioning this summer. This thing Mr. Root did in what may be called his private capacity and not in his capacity as an agent for the league of nations.

Two Courts Are Merged.

Having revived the old Hague court of arbitration, Mr. Root set about creating the new court of international justice and the significant fact is that he has tied the two courts together in a manner which has almost wholly escaped the attention of Americana Mr. D. The dirt of the crude grave came.

Throughout the investigation Captain Barrett created a favorable impression on the city, county and fed-tunder ful of earth upon the cellar floor and marked the dissimilarity between the walls of the partition that held the body and the rest of the woodwork, and broke the retaining walls.

The dirt of the crude grave came. most wholly escaped the attention of Americans. Mr. Root has provided tumbling that judges for the new international revealed.

the following mechanism:

In the first place, the members of the old Hague court will nominate a panel of judges for the new court of international justice. Out of this panel named by the old Hague court the council and the assembly of the league of nations will pick 15 men who will actually be the judges for the new court of international justice. The function of the league will be solely to pick 15 out of 30 or 40 originally nominated by the old Hague court. It is the old Hague court which surveys the world and nominates the original panel of judges. The league of nations is restricted to picking 15 of the panel originally nominated by the old Hague court.

Comment in America and particularies of the more court Judge Avery as exempted to the Garrett mortuary and the law began its sifting of evidence and the picking to get which the officers hope, will lead eventually to the apprehension and punishment of the murderer.

Denton's second wife was Dellie Mae Winters before her marriage to him.

He is survived by two nephews, trents street, and P. R. Aument, 308 West Tenth street, and a brother in Exceliption to his divorced wife and daughter.

Before his disappearance he prepared a will, in which he named Superior Court Judge Avery as exethe following mechanism:

"Comment in America and particularity the part that the council and the assembly of the league of nations will have in selecting the judges of the new court. They have missed what is much more important, namely, the part the old Hague court has in naming the judges. The net of it is that even if the league of nations should not fare well, even if some of its more important functions should cease, even if nothing more remained cease, even if nothing more remained more important functions should cease, even if nothing more remained of the league of nations than a mere formality under all these contingencies. Mr. Root's new cour: of international justice could go on. It could go on as an addition to the old Hague it would be a simple matter to sum-mon delegates from the big and little nations to the two bodies called for the specific purpose of taking con-current action in the selection of judges for the court of international justice.

To your correspondent it has alaby your correspondent it has always seemed that there is an unmistakable harmony between what Senator Harding has been saying and what Mr. Root has been doing. There is unmistakable identity between features of the platform and Senator Harding's statements about extend-ing the functions of the old Hague court of arbitration and on the other hand the deta's of what Mr. Rool has actually been doing in Europe.

Mr. Root has apparently been careful to build into the structure of his new international court of justice elements of permanence which would smable it to endure even if the league disable it to endure even if the league to fall which in the present violence of a political campaign is found frequently in the spirit of the utterance of some republican leaders.
