

20,000 VETERANS IN LEGION PARADE

Unit Vote Is Beaten First Day of Convention.

DELEGATIONS ISSUE UP

Five for Each Department and One Additional for Each 1000 Members Recommended.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 27.—A parade of 20,000 ex-servicemen witnessed by approximately 300,000 people...

After a fight led by Mrs. Julia Wheelock of New York, who declared that she insisted on retaining her inherent right to think and vote as she pleased...

Voting Strength Uncertain.

At late hour today, the correct voting strength of the convention was undetermined.

When the morning session adjourned, the national commander directed that all committees meet at 10 P. M. and remain in session until all business had been completed for presentation to the convention tomorrow.

Cheers Last Several Minutes.

At this juncture everybody arose and cheered for several minutes. Mr. Drake is representing the legion posts of France, England, Belgium and the Rhine.

Centralia Flag Carried.

The delegation from Centralia, Wash., carried in the parade the flag which was first flown by the W. O. W. on Armistice day, 1918.

Four men marching at Murray's side at the time were killed.

The Bellevue wood gift box is expected tomorrow to contain contributions to be used for a memorial for marines in Bellevue wood.

Federal Court Is to Act

U. S. Prohibition Officers Not Under Circuit Court Jurisdiction.

Three members of the federal liquor squad, indicted for their alleged share in the recent killing of R. W. Hedderly, suspected bootlegger, will not be tried in the circuit court.

Harding Leads in Vote

Another announced that she was going to vote for Cox because her father had been appointed postmaster under the Wilson regime.

Car Stolen, Boy Paroled

Sentence of 2 to 10 Years in Reformatory Suspended.

VANCOUVER, Wash., Sept. 27.—(Special)—Marcell Morsette, 13 years old, today was sentenced to from two to ten years in the state reformatory at Monroe by Judge R. H. Back of the superior court of Clark county on a charge of stealing an automobile from Orville Eby.

Hedderly Kill, Warning

He and gave me money to help me over my financial difficulty. I will pay them back and they know it.

Large Class to Be Initiated

HOQUIAM, Wash., Sept. 27.—(Special)—Hoquiam lodge, Knights of Pythias, will have for initiation approximately 230 candidates on the occasion of the visit to the city in November of the officers of the grand lodge.

100 Seriously Injured and 4 killed in 827 accidents in Portland during August. WHY TAKE A CHANCE? Phone Marshall 2391.

W. R. McDonald Co.

General Insurance—with Service.

Now Playing

Elsie Ferguson in Lady Rose's Daughter

Don't Ever Marry

The Best Comedy Drama of the Season

Chapter Nine

Go Today.

The Penalty

HE SHOULD WORRY DRAWING $50 PER WEEK. He carries an Accident Policy with us. Better phone Mar. 2391 before the accident occurs.

C & C

(Cantrell & Cochrane) Ginger Ale

Write the importers SHERWOOD CO. 56 Beale St., S. F.

with name of your dealers if they cannot supply you.

CLEAN-UP MADDEN'S IDEA

IF THE DAY'S WORK 'DOES YOU UP' TRY CANTILEVER SHOES.

Cantilever Shoes are so comfortable that they afford great relief from the "done up" feeling that follows much walking or standing.

Cantilever Shoes are restful because they are built to encourage correct carriage. The heel is slightly higher on the inside than on the outside.

There is plenty of toe room. The toes point straight ahead in their normal easy position.

And in combination with all these features for comfort and health, Cantilever Shoes possess good looks. The trim lines are graceful. Sold in Portland only by

Men's Suits, Main Floor Men's Overcoats, Third Floor Young Men's Suits and Overcoats, 2d Floor

BEN SELLING

Leading Clothier Morrison at Fourth

At the Theaters.

THE Elm City Four, a group of excellent vocalists, are the big spot on the new bill at Pantages.

They are repeat favorites from the New York Hippodrome, where for the last three seasons they have been featured in song demonstration.

Each of the men is well groomed, personable and of pleasant demeanor.

Their voices are well trained and of excellent quality. They have taken songs that have possibilities for variation and have made little runs and trills and unexpected harmonies.

A big basso, a baritone, a lighter baritone and a high tenor make up the quartette. One song that captures is "Run-te-tum-tiddy-iddy-um," which provides opportunities for many musical maneuvers.

They add characterization and individual ideas to each song interpretation and put a punch and vocal charm in each number.

At Coleman and Ray return with their new act, "The Keen Veritable Coleman," which throws the keen veritable Coleman whenever his voice into them. The act is new, but Coleman sustains his reputation for originality and new material.

A pretty maid, Miss Kelly, adds a high note to the act, singing a song delightfully.

On Saturday six lucky little maids will receive handsome walking dolls.

The Four Hurleys, acrobats, have an act which is a real gem.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his favorite was to be elected. One Hardingite told of three republican voters at his place, in addition to his mother and father, and said he could not keep enough campaign buttons on hand he had converted so many people.

His next door neighbor smilingly admitted she was one of the converts and exhibited the blue button.

Keen interest was exhibited by employees of the United States forest service when it was found that, despite the fact that they are in the federal service and closely associated with the postoffice building with staunch democrats, the vote was splitting evenly.

Comments were few and practically every one intends to vote, although it is hard to make up their minds. Harding started off with a good lead when heads of the departments, encountered in conference, voted 3 to 1.

The next office stacked up for Cox and final results showed the vote split, 26 to 26.

"Harding and Cox are both punk," declared one man, "but I suppose I'll have to stand by and show I'm a good republican."

There is a farmer election in Portland in the group of American citizens who have stalls in the public market. They all dress smartly in white blouses and black trousers.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his

Men of Portland: You Can Buy Overcoats, Suits and Raincoats at Lowest Prices

HERE!

Every garment new! Every garment guaranteed for satisfactory service! Every garment trenchantly reduced! Investment prices for you!

- $40 Overcoats and Suits $32 $50 Overcoats and Suits $38 $60 Overcoats and Suits $47 $70 Overcoats and Suits $55 $80 Overcoats and Suits $60 $90 Overcoats and Suits $70

Men's Suits, Main Floor Men's Overcoats, Third Floor Young Men's Suits and Overcoats, 2d Floor

BEN SELLING

Leading Clothier Morrison at Fourth

356 Alder Street

from home just now—I haven't decided yet."

Keen interest was exhibited by employees of the United States forest service when it was found that, despite the fact that they are in the federal service and closely associated with the postoffice building with staunch democrats, the vote was splitting evenly.

Comments were few and practically every one intends to vote, although it is hard to make up their minds. Harding started off with a good lead when heads of the departments, encountered in conference, voted 3 to 1.

The next office stacked up for Cox and final results showed the vote split, 26 to 26.

"Harding and Cox are both punk," declared one man, "but I suppose I'll have to stand by and show I'm a good republican."

There is a farmer election in Portland in the group of American citizens who have stalls in the public market. They all dress smartly in white blouses and black trousers.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his favorite was to be elected. One Hardingite told of three republican voters at his place, in addition to his mother and father, and said he could not keep enough campaign buttons on hand he had converted so many people.

His next door neighbor smilingly admitted she was one of the converts and exhibited the blue button.

Keen interest was exhibited by employees of the United States forest service when it was found that, despite the fact that they are in the federal service and closely associated with the postoffice building with staunch democrats, the vote was splitting evenly.

Comments were few and practically every one intends to vote, although it is hard to make up their minds. Harding started off with a good lead when heads of the departments, encountered in conference, voted 3 to 1.

The next office stacked up for Cox and final results showed the vote split, 26 to 26.

"Harding and Cox are both punk," declared one man, "but I suppose I'll have to stand by and show I'm a good republican."

There is a farmer election in Portland in the group of American citizens who have stalls in the public market. They all dress smartly in white blouses and black trousers.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his favorite was to be elected. One Hardingite told of three republican voters at his place, in addition to his mother and father, and said he could not keep enough campaign buttons on hand he had converted so many people.

His next door neighbor smilingly admitted she was one of the converts and exhibited the blue button.

Keen interest was exhibited by employees of the United States forest service when it was found that, despite the fact that they are in the federal service and closely associated with the postoffice building with staunch democrats, the vote was splitting evenly.

Comments were few and practically every one intends to vote, although it is hard to make up their minds. Harding started off with a good lead when heads of the departments, encountered in conference, voted 3 to 1.

The next office stacked up for Cox and final results showed the vote split, 26 to 26.

"Harding and Cox are both punk," declared one man, "but I suppose I'll have to stand by and show I'm a good republican."

There is a farmer election in Portland in the group of American citizens who have stalls in the public market. They all dress smartly in white blouses and black trousers.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his favorite was to be elected. One Hardingite told of three republican voters at his place, in addition to his mother and father, and said he could not keep enough campaign buttons on hand he had converted so many people.

His next door neighbor smilingly admitted she was one of the converts and exhibited the blue button.

Keen interest was exhibited by employees of the United States forest service when it was found that, despite the fact that they are in the federal service and closely associated with the postoffice building with staunch democrats, the vote was splitting evenly.

Comments were few and practically every one intends to vote, although it is hard to make up their minds. Harding started off with a good lead when heads of the departments, encountered in conference, voted 3 to 1.

The next office stacked up for Cox and final results showed the vote split, 26 to 26.

"Harding and Cox are both punk," declared one man, "but I suppose I'll have to stand by and show I'm a good republican."

There is a farmer election in Portland in the group of American citizens who have stalls in the public market. They all dress smartly in white blouses and black trousers.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his favorite was to be elected. One Hardingite told of three republican voters at his place, in addition to his mother and father, and said he could not keep enough campaign buttons on hand he had converted so many people.

His next door neighbor smilingly admitted she was one of the converts and exhibited the blue button.

Keen interest was exhibited by employees of the United States forest service when it was found that, despite the fact that they are in the federal service and closely associated with the postoffice building with staunch democrats, the vote was splitting evenly.

Comments were few and practically every one intends to vote, although it is hard to make up their minds. Harding started off with a good lead when heads of the departments, encountered in conference, voted 3 to 1.

The next office stacked up for Cox and final results showed the vote split, 26 to 26.

"Harding and Cox are both punk," declared one man, "but I suppose I'll have to stand by and show I'm a good republican."

There is a farmer election in Portland in the group of American citizens who have stalls in the public market. They all dress smartly in white blouses and black trousers.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his favorite was to be elected. One Hardingite told of three republican voters at his place, in addition to his mother and father, and said he could not keep enough campaign buttons on hand he had converted so many people.

His next door neighbor smilingly admitted she was one of the converts and exhibited the blue button.

Keen interest was exhibited by employees of the United States forest service when it was found that, despite the fact that they are in the federal service and closely associated with the postoffice building with staunch democrats, the vote was splitting evenly.

Comments were few and practically every one intends to vote, although it is hard to make up their minds. Harding started off with a good lead when heads of the departments, encountered in conference, voted 3 to 1.

The next office stacked up for Cox and final results showed the vote split, 26 to 26.

"Harding and Cox are both punk," declared one man, "but I suppose I'll have to stand by and show I'm a good republican."

There is a farmer election in Portland in the group of American citizens who have stalls in the public market. They all dress smartly in white blouses and black trousers.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his favorite was to be elected. One Hardingite told of three republican voters at his place, in addition to his mother and father, and said he could not keep enough campaign buttons on hand he had converted so many people.

His next door neighbor smilingly admitted she was one of the converts and exhibited the blue button.

Keen interest was exhibited by employees of the United States forest service when it was found that, despite the fact that they are in the federal service and closely associated with the postoffice building with staunch democrats, the vote was splitting evenly.

Comments were few and practically every one intends to vote, although it is hard to make up their minds. Harding started off with a good lead when heads of the departments, encountered in conference, voted 3 to 1.

The next office stacked up for Cox and final results showed the vote split, 26 to 26.

"Harding and Cox are both punk," declared one man, "but I suppose I'll have to stand by and show I'm a good republican."

There is a farmer election in Portland in the group of American citizens who have stalls in the public market. They all dress smartly in white blouses and black trousers.

The Revue de Luxe features a clever little toe dancer named Mildred La Zeller.

A talented man musician, Harry Sigman, gives a series of brilliant interpretations on the piano, an organ, symphony, the chimes and an imitation of an old-fashioned music box.

There are two solid blocks of them sandwiched in between the Japanese and Italian and Austrian truck gardeners, and they are keenly interested in the outcome of the election.

Thirty-one favored Harding and 16 were for Cox, while two held out for Debs and one for Erickson.

The woman next door to the land and labor party advocate didn't quite agree. "I'd rather see Bob La Follette get it than anyone else," she said.

"I've never voted yet," said a third, "but I would if we had a Washington or a Lincoln running."

"I usually vote, but can't get up any enthusiasm this time," declared another.

Practically all of the undecided folk on the market gave as their reason for this state of affairs that they were disappointed in both candidates.

There were some staunch Harding and Cox enthusiasts, each equally sure his