TAX LAW REVISIONS LOWER LIVING COSTS

Well-Informed Men Suggested to Make Change.

CONGRESS ACTION URGED

Excess Profits Levy Should Be Abolished or Essentially Modified. Says Kahn.

(This is the sixth of a series of articles "Faulty Taxation," prepared by Otto H. ahn, head of the banking firm of Kuhn, rob & Uo., New York.) BY OTTO H. KAHN.

Article VL No remedy for the high cost of living and the other abnormal condi-tions which are weighing upon the country can be effective which does not include a wise and courageous revision of our existing taxation sys-tem. Such a revision is not really a task of great difficulty.

For a country as immensely rich and intrinsically as little burdened, relatively speaking, as ours, it is not very hard problem to raise by taxation the sum which the economical administration of our government re-quires, without causing the sinister effects that our present taxation has brought about, indeed without caus-ing any serious economic disturbance whatever. And that should be feasible without in any way impairing the fortunate and desirable circumstances that in our country those of small or moderate means are taxed far less, both in direct and indirect taxation. than they are in any other of the leading countries. The alternative is not to burden unduly either business or the people. The idea is not of re-lieving the former at the expense of the latter. The end which should and can be attained by proceeding wisely is to benefit both business and the

Now that the emergency of the war is over I believe that this sub ject in its entirety should be sub-jected to unprejudiced and competent critical review. Good intentions are not a sufficient qualification for the task of devising a plan and methods of taxation to balance our vast expenditures. Exact thinking is required, technical capacity, adequate knowledge and the courage not to shrink from unpalatable conclusions Economic principles are stubborn things and will not permit themselves to be either disregarded or overridden or dealt with emotionally.

Tax Effects Study Urged. In England a nonpolitical commit-tee was appointed recently by the government to study the effects of e various kinds of taxes which have to parliament based upon such study

It seems to me that similar action by congress would be wise and timely. A small committee of well-informed men of different callings, approaching their task free from political, so cial and sectional bias, would not find it a formidable undertaking to evolve a measure which, while fully respongive to the dictates of equity and s cial justice, would produce no less revenue—if needed—than the taxa-tion new in force, and yet would be less burdensome upon the country. less hampering to enterprise, and far less productive of economic derangegested should. I believe, be composed possibly six or seven members of the ways and means committee of the house and the finance committee of the senate, together with, say, five the senate, together with, say, five the ways and means committee of the duly qualified non-office holding citi zens.

It should be appointed by and should report to, not the executive, but congress as represented by the speaker of the house and the presi dent of the senate.

Problem for Many Men. It would exceed the bounds of my competence and the limitations of this occasion, were I to attempt to outline a scheme of taxation to take the place of the existing one. No one man of the existing one. No one man ought to assume to do so. Too many considerations and elements are inconsiderations and elements are involved on which no one man is authoritatively informed. It is a problem for a number of men from different sections of the country and with different affiliations to study with the utmost care and thoroughness and then, by comparison of views with one another, to clear their own minds and to evolve a comprehensive scheme which shall embody the result, thus arrived at. It seems to me that it is only in some such way that we shall attain a fiscal program economically attain a fiscal program economically sound, socially just and properly balanced.

However, merely to indicate, a few definite suggestions for a program of taxation, I would state the following:

First. The excess profit tax should be abolished or essentially modified and some other method devised to tax corporate profits.

I may mention that I am not opposed to the theory of an excess profit tax. On the contrary, I believe that theory has much to recommend it. But such a much to recommend it. But such a tax, even though it were greatly image.

a tax, even though it were greatly im-proved—as it can be—over the crude system of ours, is of necessity so complex, so liable in its effects to impede trade and burden the public, and requires so competent and per-fected and steady a machinery of ad-ministration, that for practical pur-poses it is not. I believe, adapted to and not satisfactorily workable in this country.

Taxation Made Simple,

One of the essentials of wise taxation is simplicity of method. Nothing tends more to create a sullen animosity against fiscal measures, nothing is more apt to cause a man to feel justified in his own conscience to give himself the benefit of any doubt or technical loophole, than to be compelled, in addition to paying heavy taxes, to sit down and grapple with complicated tax forms and intricate schedules or to spend money for the employment of lawyers and accounts to tell him what he has to pay, Furthtion is simplicity of method. Nothing employment of lawyers and accounts to tell him what he has to pay. Furth-ermore, our government departments, generally speaking, do not possess a personnel sufficiently expert and high-ly trained, and above all sufficiently permanent, to administer laws of un-usual complexity and difficulty. In contradistinction to the conditions in the leading European countries, gov-ernment service in this country is not taken up by many as a permanent career. Too many other opportunities becken and tempt, the salaries are too lew (and to judge from the traditional disposition of congress, are not likely to be made adequate, at least in the case of the higher officials) the chances for promotion are too uncertain, the opportunities for personal constructive activity too circum-

We must not put a burden beyond its capacity to carry upon the administrative machinery at the government's disposal, because if the machinery of administering the law breaks down, the law itself breaks down, and ultimately falls into ineffectiveness, disfavor and disrepute.

At the same time that the excess of the machinery of administering the law breaks down, and ultimately falls into ineffectiveness, disfavor and disrepute.

profit tax is dealt with the extreme scale of surtaxes, which actually de-feats its own purpose, should be re-vised downward. The abolition or revision of our generally condemned ex-ess profits tax would not accomplish the purpose in view unless, at the same time, the extreme rates of inlividual surtaxes are reduced.

(*) It is true, the excess profit tax still continues in England and has, in fact, been re-enacted and increased recently, Gen-erally speaking, I have great respect for the wisdom of England's fiscal policy, but the wisdom of Engiand's liscal policy, out in this instance, the cases are not parallel for several reasons, which it would take too long to set forth here. Moreover, the Engilsh excess profit tax avoids features which are most objectionable in ours.
