Rural Vote Heavy.

Reports from rural districts indi-cated a heavier vote than for many years. This was due, it was said, to the interest manifested in the presi-dential and senatorial contests and the fact that most of he farmers have completed their fall work and could leave their ranches, without financial loss or inconvenience. Order prevailed at all the voting places during the day and not an ar-rest had been made by the poince tonight. In a few instances the corrupt practices act was unintentionally violated, but these infractious were of a minor nature and were remedied without resorting to prosecutions.
