automobiles furnished by the committee. Members of the Women's Auxiliary G. A. R. also rode in flag-bedecked automobiles.

Several hundred Spanish War veterans, not a few of whom wore the olive drab as their designation of world war service, marched with Major Clarence R. Hotchkiss, Oregon departmental commander, and H. V. Reed, commander of Scout Young camp, in the lead. Two score women, members of the Women's Auxiliary Spanish War veterans, followed the main body of this division.

Gold Star Mothers in Line.

Amid all the smiles and cheers came the gold star division, striking a note of pathos, causing the reviewers to remember that victory is not gained without breaking hearts. A litter, draped with a silken flag, on which a gold star was carried, with military escort, led this division. Following were automobiles bearing the gold star mothers and wives who lost sons and husbands during the recent war. Some idea of the large number of Portland service men who were disabled during the war, many of them yet unable to re-enter their usual pursuits of life, was gained by the large numbers of disabled men who rode in automobiles followed by members of the army nurse corps, veterans of the world war. These angels of mercy made a beautiful showing dressed in their plain white dresses, blue capes, red lined, with one flap slung over the right shoulder.

Post No. 1 Shows Strength.

The largest showing of strength in the line was made by Portland post No. 1, American Legion, led by James Bain. It was estimated that more than 1000 men were included in the American Legion detachment, which included both soldiers, sailors and marines, and men of every rank, even to several active officers of the regular army.

An excellent showing was made by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Leading this division were veterans of three wars and one who was characterized as a veteran of the Revolutionary war.

Following these bodies came various units representing combat organizations, whose members were called together to march in a body. Among such delegations marched three men—Frank Barton, Lynn Davies and Claude H. Bristol—who were associated with the Stars and Stripes, the newspaper published in France during the war by the American Expeditionary forces.

Major Drafted to Lead.

These three men, anxious for a leader, drafted a major who was standing on the side lines at the place of formation and designated him as a leader. They also called a fellow newspaperman, Fred M. White, who served with Base Hospital No. 46 in France, to march with them.

Men who had served in every branch of the Canadian army service were seen marching with the delegation of the Canadian Veterans' association. This organization had a large representation in line, led by color bearers who carried the Stars and Stripes by the side of the Union Jack.

A battle-scarred tank made its way through the streets bearing overseas veterans, with a supply wagon attached, filled with former service men instead of the supplies for which it was used three years ago.

Olcott and Baker Review.

The parade was reviewed by Governor Olcott and Mayor Baker, who were stationed on the green in front of the old postoffice building. The two officials were given a military escort composed of Captain Barke Leonard of the American Legion and Lieutenant Paul H. McMaster of the 5th infantry.

The parade also passed in review of Colonel White and his staff, which included the following: Misoch Evans, Grand Army of the Republic; Sergeant Wilmer Fetters, Lieutenant-Colonel E. C. Sammons, Private De Witt Harry, Canadian veterans; Sergeant William P. Pollett, Captain James S. Gay, chief of staff; Lieutenant-Colonel Dan J. Coman, Lieutenant Lewis Manciet, Sergeant J. W. Jones, Lieutenant P. L. Peterson, Lieutenant-Colonel M. B. Marcellus, Corporal James Walsh, Spanish War veterans; Captain Thomas Maguire, Sergeant S. G. Schneider, Captain G. L. Goodell, Major W. P. Simpson, Sergeant Thomas Whitmer, Lieutenant Jerry Owen, Sergeant Chester Boone, Captain Harry Braumbaugh, Lieutenant, senior grade, Ben L. Norden, Major Henry Hockenry, Sergeant-Major Kenneth Morrison and Lieutenant W. C. Bates.

RED CROSS DRIVE OPENS

Manager of Campaign Says More
Workers Must Be Secured.

"We must have more workers if Portland is to maintain its proud record of previous drives," announced H. E. Witham, campaign manager for the fourth annual Red Cross drive, last night at the close of the first day of the fortnight membership drive.

"The responses to our appeals have been generous," he continued, "but we have not enough workers making these appeals to enable us to reach the goal of 50,000 members fixed for Multnomah county by the national Red Cross. Fifty per cent only of the membership dues are used to carry on the important local work. The remainder goes for national and international relief work."

Downtown headquarters for the drive was opened in the Elks building, Broadway and Stark street, but neighborhood drug stores have been made community centers of the campaign.

Most active in the solicitation yesterday were the Janitzen and Y. W. C. A. units of the driving corps of Portland chapter, which are racing for a silver trophy cup offered by Mr. Witham. Though outnumbering their rival unit, the Y. W. C. A. girls obtained only three more members yesterday than the Janitzen girls, according to early totals obtained at headquarters last night, securing 122 members compared with 123 members.
