bucks than Robertson, but in the final half Robertson outshone everyone else in the Dartmouth backfield so far there was no room for comparison.

Essides all this he made all but two of Dartmouth's eight punts and averaged 40 yards to the punt. And on defense he was a behemothinal barrier to the Washington attack. If Robertson isn't all-American material then Eddie Mahan was a fliver.

Nor was this merely an exceptional performance on his part. The Darts mouth players said he played the same way in every game of the season in which he was in the lineup. A bad charley horse kept him out of a couple of games. But he particularly shone in Dartmouth's crushing defeat for Pennsylvania, 43 to 7, the week before the team came west.

Robertson, moreover, played Saturday with the same charley horse that had kept him out of a couple of games previously, in such condition that early in the struggle, before he got well warmed up, he could hardly hobble. He wore a big, bulging banding and gave way to a substitute.
