New Agreement With Americans to Run for 25 Years Adopted. No Amendment Suggested.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—The National feague at its annual meeting today extended for three years the term of John A. Heydier, president, and granted him a substantial increase in salary. President Heydler's present salary is $10,000 a year and the increase, while it was not officially stated, is said to have been 50 per cent. The additional years will make his present term expire December 31,

The new agreement with the American league which is to run for 25 years was adopted and formally signed by each of the eight clubs and President Heydler. The agreement was adopted without even the suggestion of an amendment

Annual Report Is Made.

"Baseball as an institution has responded quickly and courageously to meet an unprecedented situation growing out of the discovery of crookedness," said President Heydler in submitting his annual report. "The whole governmental structure of the whole governmental structure of the game has been changed to meet this issue of dishonesty within the ranks and to cope with the gamblers' attack from without. No one need have fear of the outcome.

"Prior to the 1920 season our New York club barred two players for the best interests of the game, thereby practically destroying its pennant chances. The Chicago club dropped another undesirable and successfully defended a damage suit brought by this player. The trial was a public one, the evidence presented by the league being of such relentless force as to warrant a finding against the player by a jury of his own townspeople. This verdict for clean baseball proved of farreaching value.
