RUTHERFORD BELIEVES COAST ELEVEN'S OVERDO DEFENSIVE

Aggie Mentor Explains Difference Between Eastern and Western Game; "Big 10" and "Big 3" Stress Attack, Which Means FASTER PLAY.

A T THE CLOSE of every football season there always arises talk to the effect that football as played in the east and middle west is faster than that on the Pacific coast.

Rutherford weighed his answer long and carefully before he gave it. Then he said something that so far as we know has not been brought out before in comparing the respective merits of the coast and the east.

"The main difference in coast football as I have seen it played this season, and that of the east and middle west," said Rutherford, "seems to me to be that teams out here emphasize the defensive.

"Not that I mean to imply that by developing the attack more in the defensive, eastern and middle western teams are willing to take more chances in kind of defense. Far be it from that. But their tactics in a game are primarily tactics of attack, while on the coast the tactics are primarily those of the defense.

"To illustrate my point the Dartmouth-University of Washington game is a good example. Nobody can say that Washington played a poor game against Dartmouth, for she didn't. She played a splendid game.

"I am new to the coast and nothing health said is to be considered in any way a criticism of coast football. I am merely endeavoring to point out what seems to me the main points of difference between coast football and that played east of the Rockies.

"The tactics of games here, so far as I have been able to observe, and accounts I have read of games in previous years seem to bear out the conclusion, are essentially defensive.

"I'll betcha a thousand million ten twillion that you'll jump over me." "It's your turn to get some of my punch."
