

TARIFF IN MAKING SENDS RATES HIGH

Committee Measure Exceeds Payne-Aldrich Bill.

REPUBLICANS ARE WARY

Attempt to Railroad Schedules Through Congress as Reported Frustrated by Leaders.

BY MARK SULLIVAN.
(Copyright by the New York Evening Post, Inc. Published by Arrangement.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 8.—(Special.)—The detailed figures of the tariff bill which the ways and means committee is now writing are kept a committee secret. But enough is known about them to justify a widespread expectation on the part of members of the lower house that the new tariff will be higher than that of the Payne-Aldrich bill and higher than that of any tariff bill ever written in America. It is this suspicion that caused the turning down of the ways and means committee proposal that the new tariff should go into effect for an emergency period of five months "sight unseen."

It was decidedly inauspicious for the republican leadership in congress that this, the ways and means committee's first official proposal, should be turned down by the republican caucus so flatly as it was. No vote was taken on the proposal, but it was evident that the sentiment among the rank and file antagonistic to the ways and means committee's position was fully 4 to 1.

Committee Hears Suspensions.
The reason publicly given for rejecting the proposal was that it was unconstitutional. Unquestionably it was of most dubious constitutionality to propose that congress should put into effect as law rates made by the ways and means committee at a time before congress knew what those rates were going to be. George M. Young, representative from North Dakota, said:

"The member of congress who is willing at this time 20 days before he can know anything about rates of duty which the permanent tariff bill will contain, to agree to give such rates the force of law as soon as reported must have faith in the ways and means committee nothing short of sublime."

Incidentally, it can be said that if the republican caucus had not turned down this proposal, and if it had been brought up in the house and senate, the democrats would have filibustered against it all summer if necessary. But while unconstitutional and expedient were given publicity as the reasons for turning down the proposal, a more real reason was the widespread whispered suspicion that the ways and means committee is writing a tariff higher than ever before known.

Tariffs Expected to Mount.
As Representative Young also said: "Are you quite sure the rates, when you learn what they are, will be such as can receive your support on final passage of the bill? Remember that as staunch a republican as James R. Mann found the rates in the Payne-Aldrich bill such that he could not vote for it."

The new bill is confidently expected to be higher than the Payne-Aldrich bill, and with equal confidence it can be predicted that the ways and means committee leadership will have extreme difficulty in getting so high a bill through the house. The republicans, both in the house and senate, are decidedly weak in the sort of leadership that can whip an unwilling party into line.

That is what accounts for the present doldrums on both the taxation measure and the tariff measure. The republicans have no Cannon and no Aldrich.

Penrose's Absence Disquieting.
The uncertain health and the absence from Washington of Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania add to the lack of confidence. Penrose is chairman of the finance committee, and as such is supposed to be in charge of both the taxation measure and the tariff measure. With Penrose absent, the next in command of the finance committee is Senator McCumber of North Dakota, and Senator McCumber has no such Aldrich-like qualities of drill master as the republicans need.

ROAD EXECUTIVES IN CITY

Carl R. Gray and E. E. Calvin of Union Pacific in Portland.

"Nothing unusual" brought Carl R. Gray, president, and E. E. Calvin, operating vice-president, of the Union Pacific system, to Portland yesterday. Mr. Gray, accompanied by his assistant, J. L. Hough, came in from Omaha in the morning and Mr. Calvin reached the city from Los Angeles about the same time. They were in conference with J. P. O'Brien, president of the Northern Pacific Terminal company and general manager of the O. W. R. & N. company, in the afternoon on business matters. Naturally, the officials were interested in the vote on the proposed freight terminal at Guild's lake, the people having acted on that feature yesterday because the city council wished authorization before taking final action. Aside from this, it was announced that nothing unusual brought the executives to Portland.

FARMER CAPTURES THIEF

Prowler in Milk House "Hogtied" and Delivered to Police.

Ed Wickham, farmer, caught a prowler in his milk house early yesterday, drinking thirstily of his supply of milk and cream. He called in his hired hand and captured the prowler without the aid of the police. He then tied the intruder securely with pieces of rope, threw him into a wagon and drove the captive to the police station.

The culprit gave the name of Bert Lee to the police. He was jailed on a charge of larceny. He will have a chance to explain it all to Judge Roseman in police court this morning.

LODGE HAS CONVENTION

Neighbors of Woodcraft From Six Counties End Sessions.

ALBANY, Or., June 7.—(Special.)—Delegates from most of the cities and towns of Marion, Linn, Yamhill, Polk, Benton and Lincoln counties to the number of approximately 150 participated in a district convention of the Neighbors of Woodcraft which was concluded here tonight after a successful session of two days.

The convention began yesterday morning and two business sessions were held that day. A social meeting was held last night and there were three sessions today, two devoted to business and one to the amplification of initiatory work. A banquet was served tonight by the local circle in honor of the visitors. New officers to serve the district for the ensuing year and delegates to represent this district at the coming state convention in Portland were chosen today.

Nineteen of the 22 circles in this district sent delegates to the convention. Cities represented by delegates were McMinnville, Dallas, Newberg, Astoria, Dundee, Newport, Toledo, Corvallis, Albany, Lebanon, Salem, Silverton, Brownsville, Halsey, Woodburn, Shedd, Independence, Dayton and Monmouth.

FUNSTER LEAVES TODAY

BORDEN ENGAGEMENT CLOSES THIS AFTERNOON.

Comedian and His Dozen Girls and Sight-Seeing Bus Score Hit at Orpheum Theater.

Eddie Borden, funster, who with his dozen girls and sightseeing bus is scoring a comedy hit at the Orpheum, will bid farewell to Portland today, as his engagement here closes with the performance this afternoon. Mr. Borden's act is called "On Fifth Avenue," and one of the principal comedy incidents is a supposed bus trip in which several couples make a sightseeing tour. The act has several scenes, all of which are enlivened by pretty girls, who make several changes of costume. Mr. Borden is on the stage almost constantly and proves to be one of the most versatile entertainers seen at the Orpheum this season. He is at home in song, dance and monologue and, in fact, that he can play the piano. The act is crowded with laughs, and Mr. Borden wins at least a dozen curtain calls at every show.

CONVENTION PLANS AHEAD

PHOTOGRAPHERS DISCUSS COMING VANCOUVER MEET.

Banquet Given in Portland in Honor of Officials of Pacific Northwest Organization.

Plans for the 1921 convention of the Photographers' Association of the Pacific Northwest, to be held at Vancouver, B. C., August 2, 3, 4, and 5, were discussed at a banquet given by the organization at the Hazelwood Monday evening in honor of Thomas Gagnon of Tacoma, president of the association, W. M. Ball of Corvallis, vice-president, and A. T. Bridgman of Vancouver, B. C., secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Gagnon gave an interesting review of the work of the association in other cities, and short talks were made by Mr. Ball and Mr. Bridgman. The speakers were introduced by D. Perry Evans of Portland.

Following the banquet the executive board of the association held a meeting at the Markham studio, 1211 Broadway, for the purpose of creating interest in the coming convention. Another meeting will be held at the Hamilton-Grove studio in the Morgan building Monday evening, June 12.

ALBERS CASE MADE ISSUE

Hood River Legionnaires Will Seek National Convention Action.

HOOD RIVER, Or., June 7.—(Special.)—The Hood River post of the American Legion will endeavor to take the matter of a rehearing for Henry Albers, whose conviction on charges of sedition was reversed by the federal department of justice, to the national convention of the legion. A resolution of the post called for introduction of the matter before the state legion meeting at Eugene and the Oregon delegation to the national meeting will be asked to get national action.

The legion post here also will take the Japanese question to the state convention and urge a renewed campaign of the legion for the elimination of Japanese immigration and the prohibition of citizenship of children of aliens who never can become naturalized.

Delegates elected to the Eugene convention were Dr. V. R. Abraham, Edward W. Van Horn and Don Meigs; alternates, Dr. J. W. Sifton, Joe Horn and Stewart Kringle.

Student Loans Repaid.

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Corvallis, June 7.—(Special.)—The honesty of Oregon Agricultural college students has been demonstrated by student loan fund figures, according to Professor E. B. Lemon of the department of business administration. "We have had little trouble collecting loans from our students," said Professor Lemon. "In the great majority of cases the money is paid promptly. The student loan fund was started in 1911 by R. A. Booth of Eugene. His example brought many donations from other sources until the size of the present fund is $10,000."

Labor Clearing House Planned.

SPOKANE, Wash., June 7.—The Spokane Ministerial association appointed a committee to formulate plans for a labor clearing house, whereby the unemployed and the employers who are members of the churches represented in the association may be brought together. The idea was broached by W. C. Carpenter, federal director of the employment department in Washington, who addressed the association at its meeting today.

WASHINGTON IS CITY OF MANY MYSTERIES

Woman Uses Trick to Get White House Invitation.

LAWN FETE PROMPTS ACT

President, Cabinet and Members of Congress Constantly Under Vigilance of "Spies."

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7.—(Special.)—Right in the middle of a busy afternoon at the Shortridge office last week a sweet voice over the telephone asked for the senator from California. He was on the floor of the senate at the time, as anyone familiar with senatorial routine would have known.

"Is the senator there?" came the query. "No? Well, he told me if he was not in when I called up to get you would give me an invitation to Mrs. Harding's lawn fete this afternoon. He told me to telephone at 2:30, and that if he was not in he would leave the invitation on his desk. Will you get it for me, please?"

Two stenographers spent five minutes looking over the senator's crowded desk, but could find no presidential invitation. The sweet young thing—for it was sweet and young as far as revealed by the medium of the telephone receiver—then was advised to telephone the republican cloakroom and ask to speak to the senator, for he might have the invitation in his pocket. After a lapse of a few minutes the jingle of the bell brought her in touch with the Shortridge office again.

Instructions Are Faked.

"I have just talked with the senator," she said, "and he said to ask you to call up the White House to get me an invitation. I do so want to go to meet Mrs. Harding socially and to take up something I have in mind." Caution prompted a stenographer to verify the senatorial instructions with the result that they were found to be faked.

The woman had not been promised tickets of any kind, had never seen the junior senator from California, nor had she telephoned him. The incident goes to show the lengths some folk in Washington will go to to win social favor, and it is illustrative of the care senatorial office staffs must exercise in accepting second-hand instructions from the chief of the office.

The telephone call in this instance could not be traced, and whether the woman merely wanted to shine in the presence of the first lady of the land or to carry out a shrewd scheme of propaganda, or whether she wanted access to the intimate White House circle with more vicious motives, may never be known. It is simply another mystery of Washington.

Washington Full of Mystery.

Washington is a city full of mysteries. There are many men here with no visible means of support. In their cloakroom conferences members of the senate tell colleagues of mysterious persons that have been shadowing them. They know the paper in their waste baskets is frequently examined. They would like to know the identity and object of the intrusive persons standing in hallways, always quietly edging their way near groups that are talking, trying to catch a word now and then. They know their private offices are no longer private, as no one can tell how many master keys are out that will unlock every door in the senate office building. Their private desks and files are no longer private. For all they know, a dictaphone is recording every word uttered in their supposedly private conferences in their offices or over the telephone.

Illustrative of the lack of privacy in Washington, a story is told of a recent conference at the White House in which a plan to install telegraph instruments in every government building in the capital to carry the interdepartmental messages that now go by mail or by individual messengers was discussed.

"But there would be no privacy with a telegraph system," objected a cabinet member.

"Privacy," the president is said to have exclaimed, "there isn't any such thing in Washington."

BURGLAR TRAPS CAPTOR

Prowler Locks County Assessor's Son in Closet and Escapes.

When William Welch, son of H. U. Welch, county assessor, returned to the family home late Monday night, he discovered a burglar at work on the second floor of the residence. Entering the front door, Welch called out to the prowler and ordered him to come downstairs.

The burglar descended the stairs and flashed an electric flashlight at young Welch's face and, at the point of a gun, compelled him to enter a small clothes closet. As soon as the door to the closet had closed the unidentified visitor made his escape through the front door.

An examination of the home did not reveal anything stolen and it is believed the burglar was surprised a few moments after he had gained entrance to the house. Welch was unable to get a good description of the intruder as it was dark and he was blinded by the flashlight.
