LEAGUE WORK EXPLAINED

Aid of Public in Boosting War on Disease Stressed by Speakers at Medical Conference.

"A militant mobilization for modern medicine that has the necessary machinery and personnel of competent caliber to conduct a vigorous campaign against the visible and invisible enemies of public health," was the characterization given the league for the conservation of public health, by Celestine J. Sullivan, executive secretary of the organization, before the physicians and surgeons attending the tri-state medical convention at the luncheon in Multnomah hotel yesterday noon.

"The league was formed to stimulate a wider and more accurate knowledge, adoption and application of preventative medicine to protect the public from quackery, from unqualified service and unsound views, to promote better hospitals and better medicine A militant mobilization for modern service and unsound views, to promote better hospitals and better medicine in these hospitals, and to encourage the enactment and enforcement of better laws to protect the health of the public," said the speaker.

Mr. Sullivan told of the campaign launched in California under the auspices of the leagus to cradicate quackery and to place the medical profession upon a higher plane. He explained the work being done in California by the leagus for the conservation of, public health in the improvement and standardization of hospitals. He said that a special study requiring constant work and travel pitals. He said that a special study requiring constant work and travel was being made that had already improved hespital conditions, raised the standards of medicine and improved the health of the state. He called attention of the delegates to the work that was being done by H. F. McInturff, secretary of the local league, for the improvement of health conditions in Oreson.
