AT THE COVEY MOTOR CAR COMPANY
FLANT.

When you pick up your daily paper and run your eye carefully down these spley advertising columns, you are thinking of a great desire—you are probably looking for something you hardly expect to find. You no doubt wish to bay the best motor car possible at the very lowest price. You much prefer to buy it from some one you know, at least by reputation, therefore you carefully study the Covey Motor Car company's ad.

To buy a car needing the average amount of repair only leads you to doubt that the price is low after all. Granting that you are an average purchaser, it is surprising how much we really have in common; you want to only—we want to sell, and we must sell a great quantity of used cars quickly so as to be able to make further trades, and in that way keep up our new car sales volume.

To sell used cars quickly we must have some other motive than just to make a direct profit on each deal—we must give more for less money than would be practical with the average dealer. Because of this, we find it necessary to rebuild, refinish and guarantee our used cars, and these better used cars quiest be priced at a lower figure than so-called market prices.

In this manner you have found the greatest possible value at the lowest possible price and your desire has been fulfilled without further searching.
