PEPPERMINT GROWN ON CRANBERRY SOIL

New Use Found for Muck Land in Washington.

RESULTS ARE GRATIFYING

Big Problem of Hard Labor Is Eliminated, Declare Two Portland Men Making Trial.

A new use for the muck land of Pacific county, Washington, near Long Beach, heretofore used for raising cranberries, has been discovered Dr. C. F. Lauderdale and George H. Weiss, two Portland men. Several years ago they purchased a cranbery farm there and until last year raised cranberries with more or less profit. But last year they raised peppermint and this year harvested their first crop with gratifying re-

"The care of peppermint," said Dr. Lauderdale, "eliminates the big prob-lem constantly confronted in harvesting cranberries. We can do away with the vast amount of hand labor." The peppermint produces for about six years on the muck land, where the roots have been planted. The Port-land men have established a distilling plant, where the oil is now being exacted. The crop was large, and though no estimate has been made of the outcome, it is probable the yield will be from 40 to 70 pounds

Faising the plants and extracting the oil has been made and it has been found that the quality of the oil extracted has been as good as any on the market and commanding the highest market price. The Portland men declare that a profit can be made from selling the oil as low as $3. a pound, but at present there is a good demand for it from $5 to $9.

Planting Runners Laborious, The raising of the peppermint on the muck lands is entirely different from raising it in the Willamette valley, declared Dr. Lauderdale. Planting begins on the muck lands in the spring as soon as properly shod horses can be driven over the fields. In many localities it is necessary to have special mud shoes from 9 to 10 inches wide provided for the horses. The land is laid off in furrows about three feet apart and about four inches in depth, then the runners of the peppermint plants are dropped into these Planting of the runners is a labo-rious task, as it is almost necessary to do this by hand, and the soft soil retards the speed. With the runners all laid, a drag fills in the soil, and then harrows are run over the land at intervals during the process of grow-ing until the sprouts are high.

great deal like a hay crop. The mower is used and the plants are raked and allowed to cure for a short time in the sun. This is in order to give the oil a little better flavor. But much care must be exercised that the leaves will not be dried out. Following the curing the crop is hauled to the still, where the oil is extracted.

A careful study of the methods of raising the plants and extracting the coll has been made and it has been found that the quality of the oil extracted has been as good as any on the market.
