Life Insurance Statistics

Life insurance statistics are not to be recommended as light reading. The mass of printed figures, million by million, grows wearisome before the reader has cracked this numerical shell and reached the kernel of pertinent personal fact. The information thus gained repays the effort, or it does not, just as you choose to look at it. But almost everyone possessed of dependents and dreams for the future, should betray a ripple of interest when informed that 64,000 policyholders died in 1920 before their insurance had been in force a full year, the payments to beneficiaries totaling $45,000,000. Here were folk who had passed the required examinations, who had no thought or expectation of mortal exit, who merely were acting upon the counsel of prudence, yet they acted none too soon.

Yes, there can be no doubt of it, life insurance statistics are vitalized and interesting and instructive, even though touched with essential gloom. They show, for instance, that the automobile plus the reckless driver is a problem as distressing nowadays as was the plague five hundred years ago, for the insurance statisticians assert that in 1920 the automobile caused 12,000 fatalities and 1,500,000 non-fatal injuries in the United States. Death claims paid by the insurance companies, resultant from motor injuries, totaled $4,500,000. In the vast majority of instances the accidents which took so heavy a toll were preventable.

Every person who troubles himself to read insurance statistics should be his own mentor. He should know, beforehand, that the affairs of providence are so various and complex that particular protection and benign attention cannot be accorded him by fate. He must stand in line and take his chance, and that wouldn't matter much were it not that the chances of his dependents are to some extent also in his keeping. The statistics show that life insurance is the only way yet devised to beat the grim game.

ENGINEERS GIVE DINNER

C. E. DRAYER, NATIONAL SECRETARY, IS ENTERTAINED.

American Association Discusses Methods of Conducting Employment Service.

Methods of conducting local and national employment service for the members of the American Association of Engineers were discussed at a dinner given at the Portland hotel Saturday night by the executive board of that association to C. E. Drayer, national secretary.

The advantages of paid and free service and local and country-wide employment boards were debated informally by Mr. Drayer, City Engineer Laugaard, W. C. Ruggitts, W. H. Marsh and other officials of the engineering body.

The proposed amalgamation of the Federated American Engineering societies and the American Association of Engineers was another topic discussed. Mr. Drayer outlined the main points, which the headquarters of the association is considering.

A meeting of the executive board was held prior to the dinner and a request to the senators and representatives at Washington for federal vocational university was formulated. Another resolution sent to the senators in Washington requested that no one but a certified engineer be appointed surveyor-general of the state.

Matters pertaining to the movement of including Diamond lake in the Crater Lake national park were discussed. The participation of the Oregon chapter of the association in planting trees and row bushes along Sandy boulevard was referred to the entire membership at the next meeting.
