

CITIZENSHIP DENIED ALIEN WAR EVADER

Olaf Hauge, Who Claimed Exemption, Loses Appeal.

CASE SETS PRECEDENT

Papers for Disloyal Foreign-Born Will Be Hard to Obtain in Future, Says U. S. Attorney.

Future attempts of aliens who claimed draft exemption during the war to gain American citizenship will meet with little success in view of a decision rendered yesterday by the United States circuit court of appeals in San Francisco in the case of Olaf Hauge of Oregon City. More than six months ago Hauge was fined $100 and sentenced to six months in prison by Judge Wolverton for having sworn falsely in naturalization proceedings that he did not claim draft exemption.

Hauge appealed the case to the higher federal court and the decision was sustained, thereby establishing a precedent, according to United States District Attorney Humphreys, which will forever bar aliens who refused through exemption to fight for this country from gaining citizenship.

Questionnaire Contradicts Claim. "This is the best news that I have had in a long time," said Mr. Humphreys when informed of the decision yesterday. "It will make it impossible for men like Hauge to obtain citizenship hereafter," he continued, "and it will also make it impossible for those who are exempted from the grounds that they were an alien and therefore not under the draft. When seeking citizenship in this country following the war, he denied that he had claimed exemption, but his draft questionnaire was produced and it contradicted his claim."

Portland Street Names

THE earliest moments in the history of Portland are commemorated in the name of Lovejoy, given to the former L street when the city was joined with East Portland in 1891. For Amos Lawrence Lovejoy owned half interest in the land which later became the site of Portland. He was born in Grafton, Mass., on March 14, 1795, and lived in Cambridge and Amherst, later being the first lawyer in the colony which settled near Oregon City. His name appears in the first deed made up the first wagon train to come across the plains to Oregon in 1842. There is some doubt as to the date when he first set foot on the ground which is now Portland, there being two distinct accounts of the same event, one taking place in 1842 and the other in 1844. At any rate, he met William Overton in Vancouver and together they were returning by canoe to Oregon City when Mr. Overton suggested they go ashore, as he wanted to show Mr. Lovejoy a claim he had staked out, but had no funds to register and start clearing. The apparent depth of the water along the shore of the river and signs where ships had stopped caused Mr. Lovejoy to become interested in Mr. Overton's claim and proposition that Mr. Lovejoy become a partner in the claim in order to develop it. This was subsequently built and the clearing begun, but Mr. Overton became disinterested and left, selling his share to E. W. Pettygrove and Mr. Lovejoy and Mr. Pettygrove are the two men who later flipped a coin to determine whether the new village should be named Portland or Boston. Mr. Lovejoy in his time served as a member of the provincial legislature in 1844, attorney-general of the provisional government in 1844, mayor of Oregon City in 1845, chief justice of the provisional territory in 1848, 1848, adjutant-general during the Cayuse war, and was also a member of the first territorial legislature in 1849 and several times thereafter. He was a member of the constitutional convention in 1857, special United States postal agent in 1859, receiver of public money in the land office at Oregon City in 1860, and a union soldier during the civil war. He died on September 11, 1882.
