other winter vegetables in abundance at reasonable cost.

This is a good time to buy potatoes and onions, for a rise in these commodities is expected early next week. The best potatoes may be purchased at ten pounds for 15 cents, and in some cases cheaper. Onions are sold at two pounds for 15 cents for the large variety. Little green opions may be had for 5 cents a bunch.

The price of eggs took a decided drop yesterday, which should be cheering news for the housewife after paying the extra expenses of Christmas and New Year's. Strictly fresh eggs of the best quality were quoted at 45 cents a dozen and the price today will probably be as low as 46 cents, according to an announcement from poultry dealers. A little more than a week ago eggs sold in the markets at 55 cents a dozen.

The decline in egg prices is attributed to the opening of the laying season and the increased production of Oregon hens. Savernly ears ago eggs were imported in large quanities, but the poultry industry has been developed so greatly that an abundance of eggs is assured local markets and a generous supply is shipped to outside markets.

Butter Prices Decline.

Another welcome announcement to the consumer is the drop in butter, which was quoted yesterday at 43 cents a pound. Dealers predicted a still further decline today.
