From Albany to Ontario, Or., there is an old wagon road, one of the old-est in the state. The road was built by a company in exchange for a land Across the Cascade mountains the old road uses Hogg pass, and it crosses the Deschutes near Lower Bridge, not far from the town of Terrebonne, where there is quite an industry in exporting chalk. Frank Inhason, manager of the wagon road company, is in Portland for a few days from his home at Prineville. He says that although the original roaded has been shifted in many places atorial seat, by counties taking it over, he has driven in an automobile over most of the road between Ontario and Albany.
