FOLLOW UP THE BUDGET SYSTEM. Reconstruction of the government ban of illegality on such lethal would be only half accomplianed if it should be confined to re-organization of the bureaus and to adop tion of a budget system. It should extend to the methods by which the budget is handled in congress and to establishment of closer relations be tween executive and legislative branches of the government in consideration of revenue and tax bills. The budget system cannot be worked effectively unless all appropriation bills originate in a single committee of the house and a single committee of the senate. Their total can then be limited to the sums recommended by the president through the budget director and to the revenue available to meet them. or it can be raised or lowered by congress with full knowledge that any increase of expenditures must met by increase of taxation.

Until the present congress assembled, appropriation bills for each department were prepared by committee having charge legislation for that department? The sp næquence was that each committee tried to provide for the needs and desires of its department with-served that an election to the govdesires of its department withpartments or to the revenue available. A single committee responsible for all appropriations must cut and trim each one, if necessary, to keep the total within the revenue or must propose new taxes to provide more revenue. The house has made the indicated change by entrusting all appropriation bills to a single committee, but the senate still fol-lows the old custom of dividing them among several committees. This may appear to be a detail of legislative procedure that is of small iterest to the public. In fact it directly concerns the amount of money in the shape of taxes which -that is, expenditure of their money on things which they want their government to do for them, and no more than is necessary to do those things well.
