Bobby Adams and Jewel Barnett have a turn that captures much applause. One, a tall girl in a creme de menthe dress, has a sweet flute-like soprano which harmonizes beautifully with the voice of the other girl. One medicy that was indescribably sweet was a string of lutiables, put together so as to read and harmonize exquisitely. One of the girls, not the planist, is extremely interesting. She is a singing comedience with an impish charm and sparkle in her carryings-on.
