OPERA SHATS TO BE GIVEN BLIND The question of what to do with the seats in the public auditorium which are so placed that the full stage would not be visible during the per-formances next week of Mary Garden and the Chicago Grand Opera com pany, was settled yesterday by turn-ing them over to the blind school. The blind members of the institution who like music will be invited to attend all of the five performances free of charge. While it is figured that when the rest of the auditorium is sold out it would be possible to sell these seats it was deemed advisable not to permit them to be sold, particularly when they could be used to good advantage in the entertainment of the blind who otherwise could not attend the operas.

It is related in The Oregonian several days later that had it not been for the first big fire in 1872 the whole city would undoubtedly have been destroyed, the fire being checked because some blocks had not yet been rebuilt. The photograph shows some of the ruins. It was taken on August 4, 1873, two days after the fire, on Front street, looking due west between Jefferson and Madison. The church in the background is the old First Congre-gational, which stood at Second and Jefferson streets. The shell of a building in front of the church is what remained of the house of Vigilance hook and ladder company at First and Jefferson streets. The small house to be seen at the extreme right is still standing on the southwest corner of First and Madison streets. The fire was fought by all of the Portiand apparatus, by fire companies from Salem and Vancouver and by hundreds of citizens. Incoming trains were crowded for several days afterward with sightseers. The photograph was loaned by Mrs. W. E. Newsom. When the Keeley cure was a thriving institution? "Is your gas dearer than elsewhere in the Pacific Northwest?" asked one last week.

No, ma'm, cheaper in price and higher in heat units.

"Well, that's strange. My bills used to be $2.50 a month before I came here and now they run $5 to $6 for our family of 2."

What, just for cooking and a tank heater?

"Yes, that's all we have appliances for."

That is strange. We'll have to investigate that and

"Well, of course, we light the oven, you see, in the mornings to warm the kitchen."

Haven't you any furnace or floor heater? "No, we use the oven."
