DO YOU REMEMBER?

The huge sign called "The Last Spike," which Frank & Co. used in 1883 to advertise its business of sign painting? The last spike is represented as the sole remaining tooth in the old man's mouth, and the wonderful improvement in transportation between 1849 and 1853 is depicted by the ox-drawn prairie schooner compared with a steam-drawn train that now seems very quaint and impossible.

In those days scientific advertising and publicity were not known but the rudimentary of the control of the sign was described as a sign of the sign was on a building at First and Washington streets.
